Game Commission's New District Headquarters

In spite of a brief delay due to a minor shortage of steel columns, the new headquarters building of the Northeast District of the State Game Commission is rising rapidly at the intersection of Memorial Highway and Route 115.

Construction plans call for completion by February 20.

The $100,000 building, first of its kind to be constructed for any of its districts by the Commission, is being built by Raymon R. Hedden and Company.

Among its unusual features is the Valley Forge stone facing, made from stone similar to that used in the construction, more than 200 years ago, of the house used as Washington's headquarters at Valley Forge.

When completed, the one-story building will be equipped with complete short wave facilities for instant communication with all of the thirty-one salaried officers in the Northeast District. Four radio relay towers will be located at Mehoopany, Mount Pocono and Jim Thorpe. Tests were being made this week for a fourth relay tower at Elk Hill, near Montrose. Installation of short wave equipment in officers' cars started yesterday.

The building will have a permanent staff of four men and two girls. There are thirty-one salaried officers in the District and 300 deputies. Present headquarters officers are in Forty Fort State Bank Building.

It is expected that the headquarters with its short wave equipment will be a valuable adjunct in the state-wide Civil Defense set-up. Carl C. Stainbrook, Sweet Valley, is head of Northeast District.
