a Dog's Life

WEANING PUPPIES

By Dr. E. M. Gildow, Director, Friskies Research Kennels

Most mother dogs make it quite plain when they expect you to assume the responsibility of feeding their babies. They simply spend more time away from their pups.

You can prepare the pups for the switch when they're between three and four weeks old, by introducing them to a cake pan full of lukewarm puppy formula. Set each puppy around the pan and dip one muzzle after another into the mixture. The art of lapping has to be learned and the first few tries will result in much spluttering and splashing, with more formula on puppies than in their stomachs.

Give two such meals the first few days. The puppies will be sharper if they are hungry, so schedule the feedings after the mother has been away from her babies for a couple of hours. Step up the number of feedings until they are on four a day and eating food of hamburger consistency well. Usually by the sixth week the puppies may be separated from the mother during the day and reunited with her at night.

The four feedings usually consist of two moist-solids formulae and two liquid formulae using milk or water or broth to soften a commercially prepared dog food such as Friskies Meal.

Be sure to supervise each meal, as the larger, stronger pups are apt to edge out the smaller, weaker ones and rob them of their fair share. Community feeding is easier for the owner than serving each individually, and stimulates the appetite through a spirit of competition.

There are two thousand magazine publishing firms in the United States with a total volume of more than one and one-half billion dollars annually.
