I read with considerable interest in last week's Post that the Pennsylvania State Highway Department intended to resurface the road from Chase Corners to the Huntsville Dam.

This is indeed good news and will go a long way in removing a bad condition, but this writer feels they should start at the top of Larksville Mountain and resurface all the way to Huntsville Dam as this portion of the road is also like a washboard, not counting the pot holes and rolls which you cannot avoid when driving over it.

In view of the talk, which has been going for a long time, of improving Harveys Lake Highway, it would seem only good sense that the State should first place in good condition, the alternate routes which the traveling public will be forced to use during the time the improvement is taking place.

Larksville Mountain Road, which already carries a lot of traffic bound for Harveys Lake and the State Park at Red Rock, will be burdened with this additional traffic and right now, this road is in a terrible condition. I know, I drive it every day.

The State will be in for some just criticism for their delay in fixing this road its entire length. With the November Elections in the offing, we should get some kind of action, although as I have been trying to point out and which all of us who travel this road are acutely aware of, I would say that our Highway System must be in poor hands when a condition such as this exists as long as it has.
