Instantly Killed

body knew how many people had been killed or injured. The program was interrupted again.

It was a toy factory on Marian Street, the Schuyler plant. Daniel loaded caps for toy pistol ammunition at the Schuyler plant.

A frantic trip to Nesbitt Hospital, while Joyce Marie visited her grandmother, convinced Dorothy Daniel was not lying among the charred victims in the accident room.

The news that he was dead came as a devastating shock. How many more had died, how many were trapped, nobody knew.

It was certain that one more man had died. Jack White, a salesman from Fullerton, who had been telephoning at the time of the blast, was found still clutching the telephone.

State Police plead with survivors over the radio. "If you escaped, let us know. We are working in the dark."

Dense smoke blanketed the area. Ambulances and fire engines screamed. Ropes held back a milling throng of thousands. A wet snow started to fall. The murk deepened.

Flames burst again and again through the pall of smoke and deepening darkness. Dallas-bound cars crawled bumper to bumper over side streets.

Rescue squads searched for the missing. Priests stood by to administer the last rites.

On Wednesday, ruins of the one-story concrete structure were still being sifted.

Mr. Zimmerman's 1952 Chevrolet, parked near the plant, was found, blown to bits.

Reconstruction indicates that Mr. Zimmerman was standing between two machines loading ammunition.

Access to the powder room was on the outside, through another door, not connected with the factory.

The young Zimmermans moved last year to the home they were buying on Overbrook Road. Daniel was a Courtland boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Zimmerman and was educated in Luzerne Schools. He had been employed by the toy factory for several years. Dorothy is a registered nurse, graduate of Mercy Hospital.

Daniel was for three years an Army paratrooper, discharged in 1952. Joining the 109th, he became a corporal.

He leaves his wife, his daughter, his parents; a brother Henry, Courtland; two sisters, Mrs. Elmira Williams, Luzerne, and Carol, Harveys Lake.

This morning, Daniel will be buried at Mount Olivet. A high mass of requiem at 10 will be celebrated by Rev. Francis Brennan, and military rites will be performed by comrades of Battalion B at the grave-side.
