Beaver Season Longer Than It Was Last Year

Beaver season is lasting longer than it did last year, from February 11 to March 19, with seven pelts per trapper allowed instead of five. Trappers have ten days after the season closes to tag their skins and report them to the Game Commission.

Carl Stainbrook states that beaver are becoming a prime nuisance, doing a great deal of damage.

Until the weather moderated, very little trapping was done, heavy snows interfering with setting traps. During the last two weeks, trapping has picked up.

A run-down on the number of pelts taken in the Back Mountain will be available early in April.
