Mt. Zion

Something unusual frequently happens here at Dunmovin. For instance, the other day I was called quickly from my mowing to go down cellar to see something. Catherine had discovered on the edge of the cold frame cellar window a bursted open nest of Praying Mantids. There they were hanging and dropping by the dozen from that upper edge of the window, tiny colorless imitations of the adult. How many of them will live we don't know; the "book" says they are hard to raise. Interesting bugs they are, the only insect that can turn its head this way and that. Cathy has slide pictures of an adult and she took pictures of these babies.
Then more excitement when a sparrow brought two or three of her babies to our feeding station on the window sill and stuffed some bird seed into them, first one and then the other. We had wondered how the seed-eating birds who are regular customer of ours ever managed to feed their children. Now we know!
