AT RICH MOUNTAIN Union Forces Claim W. Virginia Victory

BEVERLY, Va.—July 11—Evacuation by Southern forces of the strategic Western Virginia mountains appeared certain today after a decisive Union victory at nearby Rich Mountain.

Three brigades of Federal troops commanded by Maj. Gen. George B. McClellan drove a Confederate unit of some 4,000 men into retreat after two days of fighting amid the crags of the Rich and Cheat Ranges.

ONE KEY to McClellan's faulty information was seen in the dismal failure of Garnett to recruit reinforcements for his units.
With Gen. Henry A. Wise, Garnett had been ordered by Gen. Robert E. Lee into the area not only to defend the key rail centers there, but to enlist the mountaineers.

In a report to Lee July 1, Garnett formerly advised that he was able to recruit only 23 men during a full week's effort.
West Virginians, Garnett told Lee, "are thoroughly imbued with an ignorant and bigoted Union sentiment."

It appeared likely that McClellan's intelligence agents advised him that Garnett's original force of 4,000 would be greatly swollen by volunteers and reinforcements. But what really happened was that there were virtually no volunteers and the only reinforcements, the 4th Virginia regiment, were sent by Lee too late to do Garnett any good. It joined him the day of the defeat but did not take part in the fighting.

DISPATCHES specifically favored one of McClellan's three brigadiers, Gen. W. S. Rosecrans. At daybreak today, Rosecrans took a unit of 2,000 men and a troop of horse on a withering 10-hour march through the mountains to seize a key point known as Hart's farm.

The youthful son of the farm owner served as guide. In a message received by McClellan in his Roaring Creek command post, Rosecrans reported he had taken the position held by Lt. Col. John Pegram, suffering losses of 12 killed and 49 wounded. The retreating Pegram left 20 wounded on the field and surrendered 63 men, including many sick with non-combat ailments.

ONE BAFBLING incident will long be remembered by veterans of both sides in the Rich Mountain battle.
Rosecrans had planned to move toward the Hart farm at daybreak, but a bugler sounded reveille and assembly at midnight—giving Col. Pegram ample, and accidental, warning of the troop movement.

Vote $500 Million To Expand Army
Washington, D.C.—July 10—the Senate today appropriated $500 million as initial financing for raising an army of 500,000.
President Lincoln called for a force of that strength, plus a vast increase in ships and men for the Navy, in a dramatic special message to the congress that convened here July 4.

A native of Wilkes-Barre, he was associated with his father Henry in the grocery business on West South Street for many years. He was employed as receiving clerk at Vulcan Iron Works, retiring in 1942. During the Villa Uprising, he served at the Mexican Border with the 109th Field Artillery.

Auction Cake Arrives A Whole Week Early

Mrs. Joseph Checkon, Goss Manor, has the distinction of donating the first cake to the Auction this year — a week ahead of time.

Mrs. Checkon drove up to the Auction Barn Friday morning with a beautiful white cake she had baked the night before, thinking that the Auction was starting Friday.

"My grandchildren, David and Thomas Brady, are coming tomorrow to stay a week, and this is the last chance I have to bake," she said.

Charley Gosart, who is contributing 400 dozen buns to the Auction, immediately volunteered to put the cake in one of the freezers at his store to keep it fresh for the start of festivities tonight.

Mrs. Checkon and her husband, who runs the Buddies' Shop in Luzerne, have supported the Auction loyally since moving to the Back Mountain four years ago. They are looking forward to introducing their grandchildren to the fun this year.

The Checkons' son Joseph George will be unable to attend the Auction this year. He is a second lieutenant stationed with the Army's guided missile program in Germany.
