Scheduled meeting of Jackson Township School District was postponed to a later date due to the absence of the president, George Bulford, and vice president, Charles Frantz. School Directors Cease, Fielding and Lashford were present, but would not take the responsibility of accepting the new budget for the district which called for an increase from 50 mills to 80 mills, in the face of strong opposition from a large number of aroused citizens present. Several heated arguments took place and the directors announced another meeting date would be set. There were those among the protesting group who felt that an increase of approximately twelve mills from the fifty mills now being assessed, to sixty-two mills instead of the eighty mills as proposed, would be sufficient to meet the needs of the district for the ensuing fiscal year.

living among a tribe of Indians in Central Indiana, journeyed to the mid-west and found her married to an Indian Chief and the mother of four children. She had forgotten her native tongue and refused to return to Wyoming Valley. Now Congressman Flood hopes to bring her body home and erect a monument recalling the days when Colonists battled nature and Indians in Northeastern Pennsylvania.

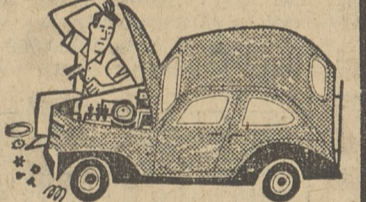

"I think the whole situation is getting ridiculous"—that's the way State Senator William J. Lane summed up the feelings of supporters of the bills to regulate strip mining which have been bogged down in legislative fireworks the past few weeks.

Lane, a Washington County Democrat, says that the bills' advocates are "just about fed up" with the way the legislation has been handled in Senator John Haluska's Local Government Committee. "I think we are going to get some action soon. I want to bring it to a head somehow this week," he commented.

The controversial measures have been nearly talked to death lately in the recriminations flowing back and forth between Haluska, his fellow legislators, and interested members of the Harrisburg press corps.

Another much debated bill—to up the legal limit on truck trailers from 35 feet to 44 feet—received a reprieve last week when the General Assembly approved its previous stand and reversed the measure.

But the bill still needs Senate approval and from all indications that's not going to be easily come by. Senator John T. VanSant, of Lehigh County and one of the leading proponents of the legislation, says that "unless we can gain some time, we probably will lose." According to VanSant the measure currently has the backing of only 17 Senators. Twenty-six votes are required for passage.
