Public Invited To Visit Model Vacation Home At Harveys Lake

The opening of the Institute For Essential Housing vacation model home display on Saturday and Sunday, July 29 and 30, was announced today by George Ruckno, president of the Forty Fort Lumber Company, authorized IEH dealer. The home is located at Warden Place, Harvey's Lake.

"The public is invited to visit this display which represents the greatest advance in the history of vacation housing in America. For the first time, a completed home is within the reach and range of the average American's budget. The remarkable IEH finance plan eliminates the need for the American family to spend years, while paying rent, to try to accumulate the down payment customarily necessary in the purchase of a home," Mr. Ruckno said.

"While employing the best building materials and the best workmanship, IEH has designed homes that are the most economically built in the country. The substantial savings are passed on to the buyer, opening the door to home ownership to millions of families who have dreamed of their own homes, but who have been denied that privilege until the Institute For Essential Housing came into being," he added.

E. A. Diefenbach, managing director of the Institute, which has its headquarters in Wayne, Penna., today congratulated Mr. Ruckno on the completion of his plans for the opening and said, "Our belief in our program has been confirmed by the wide acceptance of the IEH home throughout the United States.

"Although our purpose was to provide essential housing to the people who need it most, we are complimented by the fact that many persons of higher than average income are buying the IEH models for vacation homes on the lakes, at the shores and as retirement homes. It assures us that the quality we designed into our homes is being recognized by discriminating buyers."

Mr. Diefenbach pointed out that IEH residences are available in four stages: the completed home, the "ready-to-live-in", in which the buyer completes certain interior work and decoration, the basic home with all the materials needed to finish the interior, and the basic home alone, wherein the exterior is finished and the buyer, if capable, furnishes his own material and labor to complete the structure.

"At the outset, we long perceived the disadvantages of the so-called "shell" home, so we lay no stress in the sale of the basic home. As a matter of fact, under our generous financing plan, the home-buyer can eliminate the drawbacks inherent in the basic home. In the first place, financing for a "shell" home is limited to a five-period. On top of that, the buyer must have the money necessary to buy the supplies, fixtures and labor to complete the job," the IEH official said.

"With the IEH providing financing for as long as 10 or 12 years, it is rather pointless for a person to consider the purchase of a "shell". Anyone now paying rent and with a reasonably good credit rating, can afford a new IEH home today," Mr. Diefenbach concluded.

The model home is furnished and decorated by Fowler, Dick and Walker, the Boston Store in Wilkes-Barre.

EASY DOES IT

Home baking is fun. But so is loafing! It's easy to combine the two with this fast-fix recipe for Ham Fan Tans. The magic wand which cuts time is the combination of yeast and biscuit mix. Just one rising, and next-to-nothing kneading.

HAM FAN TANS
 ¾ cup warm water (not hot - 105 to 115° F.)
 1 package active dry yeast
 2½ cups biscuit mix
 4½-ounce can deviled ham
 ¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese

Dissolve yeast in warm water. Stir in biscuit mix, beat vigorously. Turn out soft dough onto surface well dusted with biscuit mix. Knead until smooth, about 20 times. Divide dough in half. Roll one half into oblong 11" x 9". Brush lightly with soft margarine or butter. Cut into seven equal strips about 1½" wide. Spread six strips with deviled ham and sprinkle with cheese. Stack strips one on top of the other with plain one on top. Cut into six equal pieces about 1½" long. Repeat with second half. Place cut side up in greased muffin cups. Cover. Let rise in warm place about 1 hour. Bake 15 to 20 minutes at 400° F.

Poet's Corner

A QUESTION I'VE BEEN MEANING TO ASK Galley 4 Marlene
 All hail, Pennsylvania, the Safe Driver State:
 I've searched for that driver, early and late.
 Undiscouraged, I seek him wherever I roam --
 He wasn't the driver tailgating me home;

He wasn't the trucker steering a load
 Of gravel dead center on Carverton Road;
 He wasn't the cloth-head who gave me a chill
 By passing me briskly on top of a hill;

He wasn't the kid who proved such a bother
 Driving the car that belonged to his father,
 A Cadillac blind to the sign that read STOP,
 (The affair was smoothed over, the cop knew his pop).

When you go for a stroll in the Safe Driver State,
 Be sure that your will has been brought up to date,
 Keep alive keep alert, you may need to be spry
 And to leap as the speeders come hurtling by.

When you come to a halt after taking a ride,
 Be certain you park only on the wrong side.
 The majority do with indifference to danger,
 And if you park correctly they'll know you're a stranger.

All hail, Pennsylvania, the Safe Driver State:
 I've searched for that fellow for four years to date,
 I'd be honored to meet him — if you chance to see 'em —
 Or is he enshrined, Safe, within some museum?

Auction Sentinel

by Edna Drabick Johnson
 "I think that I shall never see..."
 Is a poem that has always delighted me,
 And I sensed that author's meaning
 As I gazed upon that tree.

It stood as a mighty sentinel
 Watching the folks below,
 As they came to the Library Auction,
 Seeing them come and go.

We looked up to its branches, above
 our heads so high.
 Majestically they were reaching toward that summer sky.
 And when I asked what kind it
 was,

"A poplar, I think," was my husband's reply.

"Though they usually do not grow
 so large
 Or last as long as this,"
 And I marvelled at its gnarled
 bark,
 And the years it had known rain's
 soft kiss.

Then my thoughts returned to the
 bidding crowd,
 To the noise, sometimes muffled
 and sometimes loud,
 Depending on the item that was
 to be sold.
 Would the money in one's wallet
 make him bowed or bold?

Once again my thoughts went back to the tree
 (And the many stories it could tell
 to me,
 Of the things that were murmured
 beneath its height
 During Auction days, and on into the night.

Of purchases hoped for, of things
 old and new,
 Of a pony, a small boy, and a
 loving father, too;
 Of loyal helpers who have come
 and gone...
 That tree's story could go on and on.

Our time and the Auction had to come to a close,
 But I have a feeling, and who really knows?
 That if you go and stand beneath
 that tree,
 Listening very quietly,
 Its gnarled bark and whispering
 leaves
 Will talk to you as it did to me.
