Editorially Speaking:...

NOW IS THE TIME

If there was ever an opportunity for the planned development of the commercial and cultural center of Kingston Township, Dallas Borough and Dallas Township,

Not only will the new Luzerne-Dallas Highway remove all the unsightly billboards that have marred the beauty of the area, it will also remove practically all business places from Blazes Stone House on the Big Curve to Hall's Drug Store at Center Street, Shavertown. An almost equal number of properties will be removed on the other side of the road from Bulford's Farm Supply Store to Howard Isaacs Display Room and then from the Isaacs Property to Back Mountain Shopping Center there will remain only two or three isolated business properties. The good and the bad will go.

Picture this, if you can, and you will wonder what is to become of the shoemaker, the nurseryman, the service station operator, the beverage distributor, the lawnmower repair man, the television service man, the sporting goods merchant, and the produce dealer. These services will be gone and there will be no place for them to locate between Dallas and Luzerne, for the State Highway Department is not buying frontage alone. It is buying complete properties to their rear lines.

This exodus may create a flurry of interest in the vacant business properties on Main Street, Dallas; but Dallas cannot accommodate the number of business places that are required to service our expanding population. Neither can the Back Mountain and Dallas Shopping Centers.

What is required now is that representatives of our service clubs, municipal governing bodies, businessmen and all others interested in the future development and beauty of this community, get together around a dinner table with members of Luzerne County Planning Commission and do some hard, fast and constructive thinking preparatory toward making this not only the most beautiful but one of the best suburban communities in Penn-

Six months from now will be too late! We need a central municipal building, consolidated police force, unified street department, community building and the library in a new centrally located building. We need an adequate and attractive commercial center for small and large businesses. This is our opportunity to prove that we can do things in a really big way not at excessive cost!

With all this commotion about fallout shelters, it seemed like a solid idea to case the basement for possible inspiration.

Could be that Tom's flagstone floor might come in very handy at last. Having been laid eight years ago practically over my dead body, poetic justice says that maybe it will now shield my dead body, or with luck, keep it from being dead. That section of the house has underneath it the lowest ceiling and the darkest hidey-hole in the entire basement. The front of the basement is airier and roomier, but it does not have the protection of a flagstone floor to deflect radiation. The whole business is pickaxed out of solid rock . bearing strata that lets the water in and out with equal ease, the tide rising in the front of the cellar and flowing smoothly through to the back, where it leaves by other fissures in the rock. This only happens after a severe and long lasting rain. Could be an air alert might not synchronize with a cloudburst. A survey of the snug quarters under the kitchen floor resulted in some interesting conclusions. That long kitchen table with the netting coop on top, where we normally cool pies or stash the remains of the Thanksgiving turkey for safe-keeping, for instance. That table, with the coop removed, and another smaller table placed at the end, could easily hold a mattress, far above the flood. Room at the other end for a folded roll-away bed.

Sleeping quarters then, for two people.

And goodness knows it's dark enough down there so that two people could go into hibernation, and maybe the rays would not be able to find their way in the gloom.

That wall cabinet, tall and narrow, with the many shelves. obviously intended to hold preserves, but it could just as easily hold canned food, and on the top, large jugs of water

Be a good idea to get rid of the lawn-mower and the stepladders. They wouldn't need protection from fallout, so they can go in the front of the cellar

How about that half sack of cement? and the eight trowels for spreading? How on earth did we get eight trowels in the first place? Lemme sea Tom was building a stone wall outside, strictly for kicks, and that year we had a lot of grandchildren in residence. The picture clears up, and there are the grands, each wielding a miniature trowel. They kept coming in, loaded with cement dust, but

Very unlikely that we will ever have so many small grandchildren on hand again, burrowing in the cement bag, until the new crop starts coming. (And with a forty-fifth anniversary in the bag, that might not be so far off as you'd think.)

So, jettison the trowels. No, let's save them, just for old times sake. And the cement, it could come in very handy in sealing up the chinks.

Ooops, there it goes, all over a pair of black canvas sneakers. That about finished the Sunday morning survey.

But the thing kept coming back in the watches of the night. A blue-print of the cellar kept outlining itself. If we blocked up that section of the cellar, using cement blocks with dirt, how would we reach the back door and the cellar steps?

But it would be unthinkable to lose the beneficial effects of a protective flagstone floor above our heads for any mundane consideration such as removal of trash and tin cans.

It will be perfectly simple to stock those shelves with food. Some morning I'll wake up with the complete solution to the hidey-
