Come Now, This One Is A Cinch

Is it a snow shower? A frost picture on a windowpane? A picture of a flower-studded glacier meadow in the Rocky Mountains? Some of the answers the Post has been getting are way out in space. One reader was convinced that a recent Whatzit represented a beaver, held up by the tail, and another reader was equally confident that it was a pig's snout. Photo By Kozemchak

Sunny Weather For Haymarket Antique Show & Sale At Evans Falls

It looked like Old Home Week at the Haymarket Antiques Show Saturday, with Library Auction fans strolling about, on the lookout for choice items to give to the Auction next July. Everybody got a rousing sunburn. It was one of the hottest September 23rds on record, early morning ground mist giving way to a blistering sun, to make it even hotter than it was last year for the Show.

Dealers spread their wares on trestle tables and on the grass. Frank Jackson did a spot of trading, bartering off a decorated chair for a rocker destined for his granddaughter's college room. Then he located, at another display, a duplicate of the chair he had bartered, made a deal on that, and will decorate it to once more complete his set of six chairs.

Schallenbergers, along with their display of beautiful lamps, showed half a horse, and on the other side of the booth, the other half. To forestall the obvious inquiry, "which half?", the horse was split directly down the spine. It used to be mounted on rockers, but is now destined to adorn a game room on either side of a stone fireplace.

Polished copper washboilers, gleaming brass, coffee pots, sparkling glass, winked in the sunshine. Gate tenders sat under wide umbrellas. Customers who had attended last year's show and were prepared, sported wide straw hats.

Indian corn, striped gourds, flaming zinnias, polished apples, ripe pumpkins, added their color to the scene.

An art exhibit was hung by Mrs. Joseph Miller of Bloomsburg, using the grey weathered siding of an old barn as a backdrop. Notable was the center picture, an airy modernistic painting in soft greys and blues, suggesting limitless space. "His" and "Hers" lacked the primitive touch of last year's facilities. Beaumont Inn contributed the folding chairs, which were set up in the shade and held a full complement of fagged customers throughout the day.

From Clarks Summit were Charlotte Dailey, Dave and Carol Dailey, Ella Clancy, and Gladys Davies, all with exceptionally nice pieces, including good copper, four-post bed, wagon seats, good early American wooden pieces. Silver Sleigh, Tunkhannock Highway at Lutes owners, had a beautiful dry sink and an outside copper kettle. Davis and Harley report good business in their new location. Paul Coolbaugh, Lutes Corner, one of the longest established antique dealers, showed a set of four arrow-splat plank-bottom chairs, a sample of his expert refinishing. Betty Mihal, Trucksville, showed cut glass. Oliver Varner, working with Robert Foote of Evans Falls, prime mower in establishing the show, had a good collection including wood and metal pieces, antique oval frames, rocking chairs.

Jane Cathrall, Dalton, showed a round drop-leaf table, its legs cut down, and a wooden wash bench. Her prize piece was a black walnut cabinet with many drawers, white ironstone knobs. Three shops from Kingston showed. The Red Door had tiny brass sleighbells, highly polished, and nice china; The Memory Shop, enormous running lights for a steamer, polished copper containers; Mrs. Charles Forve, trivets.

Wilkes-Barre dealers included Peter P Loeffler, who showed a relic of the Lyman Howe Travelogues, a magic lantern with colored slides; and Anthony Wideman, spoons and a Schoenhut toy piano. New York State was represented by four dealers: Baker's Antiques, Endicott; red and white patchwork quilt, glass; John Morford, Fultonville, polished brass copies; Mill-Brook Antiques, Norwich, polished brass bells; Maynard and Olive Cole, Sidney, china headed dolls, clocks.

From Wyalusing area, Cooper's Antiques, with a little of everything up to and including the kitchen stove (in miniature); Audrey Cook Rich, The Cottage Shop, powder horns, blue handwoven coverlet. From Reading, Rhena L. Hinz, old cookie cutters, glass knobs, dessert moulds; White Haven, Pauline Fox.
