LOW PROTEIN DIET FOR DOGS WITH KIDNEY DISORDERS

By Dr. E. M. Gildow
Director, Friskies Research Kennels

Dogs are living longer these days, thanks to improved methods of feeding, better home and medical care. But during those extra years that are now added to a dog's life, certain problems associated with old age arise. Some of the vital organs weaken from just plain wear and tear.

The kidney, for example, tends to function less efficiently as a dog ages. One of the first noticeable symptoms is that your pet will drink greater amounts of water and will relieve himself more frequently. This is nature's way of trying to help. The kidney, which acts much like a filter, needs more fluid to perform its job when it's not functioning properly.

Your veterinarian should be contacted promptly should you note these symptoms and your pet is on in years. After a thorough examination and a urinalysis, the veterinarian will be able to determine the extent of the damage and will prescribe medication and often, a change in diet.

The diet recommended will probably be lower in protein than the dry matter dog is currently getting. This is because the excess protein that's digested and absorbed goes through an intricate chemical conversion in the liver and kidney before leaving the body.

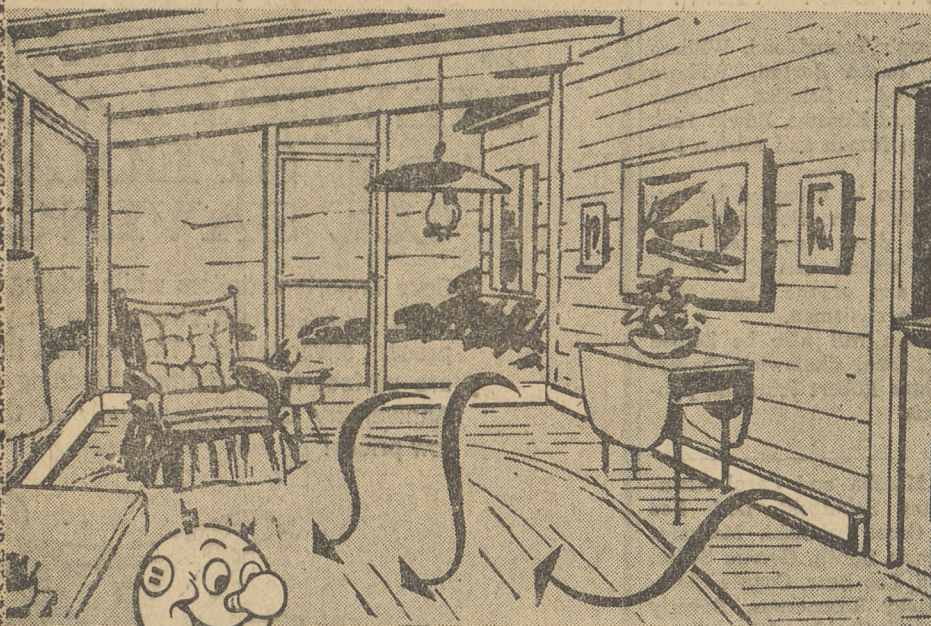

The most economical and efficient way to provide your pet with a satisfactory protein diet is to feed him a top quality prepared dog meal such as Friskies. Friskies meal, for example, contains 25 percent protein on a dry matter basis, compared to the high cost special diet canned dog foods which contain from 23 percent to 27 percent protein on a dry matter basis. Furthermore, the dry meal has a higher level of calcium than these special diet canned dog foods to better meet the dog's calcium requirement which increases as he grows older.
