Mrs. Fisher's Miniature Rooms Are Featured In Hobby Magazine

Back Mountain residents who have seen Mrs. Dwight Fisher's miniature rooms, filled with enchanting little reproductions of period furniture, will be delighted that five of the ten miniature rooms are featured in the February issue of "Hobbies, the Magazine for Collectors."

Reproduced are: the Victorian Parlor; the Colonial Bedroom; the Pennsylvania Dutch Kitchen; the Library; and the Antique Shop.

Mrs. Fisher has shown her tiny rooms, assembled on a scale of one inch to one foot, a number of times in the Dallas area. The Library Book Club enjoyed the exhibit several years ago.

She goes into endless meticulous detail to make her rooms look lived in by tiny Victorian or Pioneer ghosts. Newspapers, little lamps, books, baskets, dishes, a bit of fancy work, bring the parlor up from a skeleton, furnishing the usual bare bones with pleasing curves. Mrs. Fisher uses wallpaper, mirrors, chandeliers, an ornate "throw" for the piano, heavy draperies, cushions on the couch, a hobby-horse for the baby of the family.

In her Colonial bedroom, a four-post bed holds the center of the stage, complete with ruffled canopy, its light draperies reflected in the frilly window curtains. There is a brass bedwarmer and a gaily painted dower chest.

The kitchen is a dream room. A Boston rocker stands by the fireplace, painstakingly constructed by Mrs. Fisher from tiny rocks found in her own driveway. Cooking utensils hang in its depths, and in a warm corner is the mammy-bench, the cradle where a busy housewife dropped down between household tasks to rock the baby to sleep, snug in its slatted enclosure, and in no danger of falling to the floor.

The Library has a stained glass window reaching almost to the peak of the high arched Gothic ceiling. A beautiful chandelier hangs from the ceiling, and high bookshelves hold many volumes. There is even a tall ladder, designed for a small ghost's use in reaching the higher shelves. Crimson velvet draperies give a warm and mellow note to this interior.

The Antique Shop holds just about everything that might be found at a country auction, up to and including a cigar-store Indian. There's a washstand with bowl and pitcher, a Boston rocker, lamps, gadgets, 150 pieces in miniature.

Professional Organ Recital Sunday At Dallas Senior High School

Sunday afternoon at 3, there will be an organ recital at Dallas Senior High School. Miss Margery Davis, representing the Allen Organ Company of Macungie, will present a program including light classical and serious music. Also appearing on the program will be Paula Scott as soloist, accompanied by Marsha Sowden.

The Allen organ installed in the auditorium has attracted much favorable comment. A revival of interest in the organ has accompanied the perfecting of the organs of today, now no longer considered as suitable only for churches, but to be used at assembly programs, as a much more varied instrument, as accompaniment to singing, or with band and orchestra.

Lester Lewis, band director, says: "It can add its full-throated beauty to assembly programs, its reverent tones to Baccalaureate services, or add to any community program."

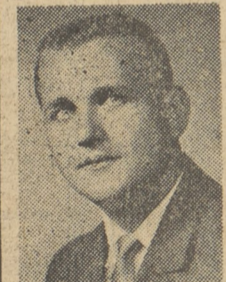

Most important it can attract students to music, who would not normally explore this big-sounding instrument."

Sunday's organ recital is free, a gift to the community, which may enjoy hearing a professional organist bringing out the best to be obtained by a beautiful instrument.
