Editorially Speaking: Which Would You Choose?

Sometimes in calmer moments when we reflect on the health and welfare of this community, we wonder whether the new State Park in Kingston Township will do as much to promote it as a sewage disposal system.

A State Park will be lovely. A lake has fascination for all of us, but if the people of this community were to vote on how their money is to be spent, we think they'd ponder a long time before choosing a State Park over a sewage system for the promotion of our Health and Welfare

Why doesn't the State ask us sometime what we really need, before GIVING us so much that we are in no hurry to receive and for which there is no urgent demand?

WHO PLANS A COMMUNETY?

By LESTER W. HAUCK

Who plans a community? Everyone does-everyone including the man who decides to build a home, a store or a shop in some particular location, the highway engineer who decides where the right of way should go, or the group who decides where the new amusement park will be located.

Each has his own idea of how the land in any community should be used. Each has his own interest at heart and efficiently proceeds with his special brand of planning without regard for the other fellow's point of view until some conflict occurs. This is the method by which our Back Mountain Area has been planned-accidentally "growing like Topsy". This certainly is not comprehensive community planning.

The many problems developing from this kind of growth eventually are dropped squarely in the laps of the governing bodies of the municipalities involved.

"When will you take over our street?" "You must do something about that trailer next door, or those horses in the back, or his septic tank leaching on my property, the noise from that shop across the way, or that sign blinking in my bedroom window, that rain water that pours across the corner of my property, or the junk yard developing over there."

Such demands on our governing officials will multiply as the population grows, and they eventually will be forced to enact ordinances to cotrol this problem or that as the pressure becomes unbearable. This would be, a best, piecemeal control-control without direction. The foresighted community should provide controls before the problems get out of hand.

The law of the Commonwealth provides that the governing body of each unit of government-borough, township, city or county-is empowered to appoint a planning commission to assist and advise the local government in matters concerning planning. Further, the State and Federal governments are so anxious to have local municipalities plan for the future that they will provide three quarters of the cost of preparing a master plan under the direction of such a commission.

Planning Commissions, appointed by the governing body, vary in size, but commonly consist of five persons. They should be a representative group of citizens because their decisions affect all the people of the community. The individual appointee must be distinguished by devotion to the community interest, broadmindedness and an ability to understand and deal with difficult problems. The citizen who serves in this capacity must devote long hours to difficult work for which he will receive no tangible reward.

A Commission cannot pass laws or arbitrarily impose its ideas upon the community; its sole function is to study commnity problems and recommend courses of action to the local government. Only the officials elected by the people and responsible to them have the power to make rules and regulations.

The planning process is hard work and very few commission members will have the time, inclination and know-how to "go it alone." Without professional planning assistance the job most likely will never get done. The employment of a planning technician to do the surveys, to prepare the maps, charts and graphs does not relieve the commission of the responsibility to make the decisions of what is best for his community.

The planning technician can be a professional hired by the community involved for that purpose. A smaller community can not afford to do this therefore must turn to planning consultants to do their work.

All planning begins with a survey of what exists. The community planner must first gather information about the community. The present land use; the existing facilities, utilities, schools, parks, streets; the people, their general character and attitude as well as their economic standing; the industrial and commercial developments; and other contributing factors-historical, geographical and political that effect the character of the community.

He must appraise the direction of present growth, estimate the future population, where the people will live, shop, work or play, and analyse the industrial and commercial potential of the area. He will need to know which neighborhoods are growing and which declining, which facilities are being used and which neglected.

When adaquate information has been assembled, analyzed, mapped and charted, the commission has reached the critical point and must now ask themselves many questions. Where do we go from here? What do the people want this community to become?

What should be its course of development for the next five, ten, twenty, or fifty, or fifty years? The commission must leave no stone unturned to gain the foresight to answer these questions with propriety and conviction. All factors in the community must be regarded and all factions heard. All interested parties must have an opportunity to contribute to the development of the comprehensive master plan.

A Master Plan is a statement of objectives, and a statement of the means of attaining these objectives. It regards all of the facets of a community here-to-fore discussed recorded on maps, charts and graphs, depicting the desired future community, pri marily the desired future use of its land. It should aim for the most desirable end result but should not be considered a panacea to all of our ills. The Master Plan must be a dynamic document capable of alteration and amendment and should be kept constantly up to date if it is to be successful. The Master Plan alone is completely impotent unless it is implemented by law. Ordinances designed to accomplish its objectives should be enacted and administered by the governing body involved, with the assistance and advice of its planning commission. Here in the Back Mountain, there should be but one Planning Commission with one Master Plan of the entire region responsible to the entire population, even if the necessary ordinances will have to be enacted by the individual local governments. Next: How is the Master Plan implemented?
