727 Centenarians Die In Five Years

Centenarians are not a rarity in Pennsylvania. This fact was established following a report from the Pennsylvania Department of Health which made a statistical five-year study of centenarian deaths between 1957-1961.

During this period Pennsylvania had 470 residents whose age at death was reported to be over 99 years. Of these 470 deaths, 342 were females, or about three times the number of males, which was 128.

Surpassing the century mark were 257 whose ages ranged from 101 to 115. Heart disease, as in the general population, claimed the greatest number of deaths. The other leading causes of death of centenarians differ from that found in the general population. General arteriosclerosis was the second most frequent cause of death. Other causes were vascular lesions of the central nervous system, influenza and pneumonia. Cancer, which is the second most frequent cause of death in the overall population, is in fifth place. Accidental falls account for the same number of deaths in this age group as cancer.

Philadelphia and Allegheny County were given as the residence of the decedent in 96 and 48 deaths respectively. Other counties in which the number of centenarians dying was high were Lancaster with 18, Luzerne with 17, Berks and Montgomery 16, and Erie County with 15. Bedford, Centre, Elk, Fulton, Montour, Pike and Tioga Counties had no resident centenarian deaths between 1957 and 1961.

FALL FOOTBALL FROLIC

AN after-the-game party's a "winner" with the football crowd. Make it buffet style for ease of service and for informal conversation. A colorful football centerpiece constructed from chicken wire and flared tissues and framed by home-made goalposts sets the mood. Tissue pom poms are clever favors for your guests, and easy to make, too.

Carbon Monoxide Season Is Here

A warning about carbon monoxide poisoning is issued by the Regional Medical Director, Dr. C. Hayden Phillips, of the Pennsylvania Department of Health. "Cold weather means closed windows in homes and automobiles. Both places may have sources of this poisonous gas which can cause death," Dr. Phillips said.

"One of the dangerous aspects of carbon monoxide poisoning," Dr. Phillips warned, "is that the symptoms do not immediately suggest the cause. In an automobile, nausea and dizziness, accompanied by headache, should not be attributed to motion sickness. Instead, automobile windows should be opened and fresh air breathed for several minutes."

Danger of ignoring early symptoms is that those symptoms can progress rapidly from mild to severe. By the time a victim is suddenly aware that he is being seriously poisoned, he may be only seconds from unconsciousness and unable to help himself.

Gas-burning appliances in the home should be checked carefully for defective operation, all gas burners examined and cleaned. Ample fresh air should always be available in garages and automobiles, even on the coldest days. The exhaust system of the car should be carefully checked for leaks.

"If someone in your presence is overcome despite these precautions, move him immediately to fresh air, and give him artificial respiration if he is not breathing," Dr. Phillips advised.

The best treatment is prevention.
