Squire And Wife Fete Fiftieth, Winning Firsts

Justice of the Peace and Mrs. John Fowler, Orange, celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary September 28 by winning first prize at Bloomsburg Fair in several competition-shows.

The Squire, who has been raising Bantams since he was an eighteen-year-old boy in England, took two firsts with his Modern Game Red Pyle birds. Says the veteran magistrate, regarding the Bloomsburg show: "I never came away without a First."

Mrs. Fowler won two Blue Ribbons in crochet-competition. Well practiced in the art, she has been doing the delicate needlework since she was four. She has taken many firsts at the Columbia County shows.

The Fowlers married in Durham, England in 1912. Several years later, the Squire left home to fight the Germans. He was an infantry sergeant. For a while after the war he mined coal in England, and then in 1924 moved to West Pittston to continue in his trade in the United States. In all, he was a miner, he explains proudly, for forty-three years.

Squire Fowler is no newcomer to his present position either. He has been a squire since 1932.

John Fowler, Jr. is the owner of Colonial Inn, Fernbrook. His sister, Mrs. Frank Smith, and her family, live near their mother and father

Carl Stash, 9, Now At Girard

School Fully Endowed For Fatherless Boys

Carl Andrew Stash, 9, has been admitted as a student to Girard College, Philadelphia. The son of Mrs. Elizabeth Stash and the late Andrew Stash, 141 Davenport Street, Dallas, Carl was among sixty-five admitted to the well-known boarding school for boys.

Girard College was founded in 1848, according to the will of Stephen Girard, famous philanthropist, and himself an orphan. The school is completely endowed for instruction, activities, and living facilities of each boy.

Carl will be able to study at the Philadelphia boarding school until he receives his high school diploma. Before entering Girard, he attended Gate of Heaven School.

Andrew Stash, an electrician, died December 25. Carl has two sisters, Betsy Ann, 11 and Mary Ann, 6 and one brother Andrew, 4.

Mrs. Stash thinks this is a wonderful opportunity for Carl, and fervently hopes he does not get stricken by that old boarding school ailment, homesickness.

Mrs. Osterhout, 57, Was Housemother For Deaf

Transferring her home-making skills to the mothering of children in the Pennsylvania School for the Deaf, since the death of her husband in 1956, Mrs. Mary Martha Osterhout of Dallas had started the new term with enthusiasm early in September. She had been back here two weeks ago to visit her daughter, Mrs. George Weale, Columbia Avenue, and appeared in abounding health.

Thursday night she died suddenly at the school where she had been house mother for four years. Her husband George died equally suddenly in 1956.

Mrs. Osterhout, 57, had learned, during her four years as housemother, to communicate with the deaf children, and took great pride in her work. She was looking forward to spending many more years with "her children."

Born in Wilkes-Barre, April 5, 1905 she was educated in city schools. She moved to Dallas a year after the death of her husband, joining Dallas Methodist Church.

She was buried Monday afternoon at Memorial Shrine, her pastor, Rev. Russell Lawry, conducting services from Disque Funeral Home.

Year-Around Fishing Needed To Avoid Overcrowding Bass

Largemouth bass of trophy size are usually found in ponds and lakes where year-around fishing and natural predation remove most of the small and medium sized fish, says Edwin L. Cooper, research zoologist with the Agricultural Experiment Station at the Pennsylvania State University.

Fish counts by Cooper and associates reveal that lakes or ponds, closed to fishing, seldom produce "lunkers" or big ones because of intense competition for food. Natural reproduction, they point out, usually produces too many fish.

"Our experiments show that medium sized and large bass should be harvested continually to make food available for other bass to grow," Dr. Cooper states.

In one study, about 5,500 bass of 5-inch length populated a 3-acre experimental pond in the spring. Of these, 4,600 or 84 per cent were removed, leaving 900.

Fish counts in the fall revealed 830 well-fed two-year-old bass, all about 8 inches long. Their total weight was three-fourths that of the entire spring population. Moreover, the 830 survivors had spawned a new crop of fingerlings, making the total fall weight equal to the spring weight.

These studies indicate that food is more important than age in determining size. A poorly fed bass will seldom get to be 10 inches long in 3 years, Cooper observes. A very well-fed bass could mature at 10 inches in 1 year.

Mrs. Florence Helfrich Dies At 39 In Her Sleep

Mrs. Florence Rolison Helfrich, 39, died in her sleep Wednesday at her home in Grove City, Ohio, three days before she had expected to come to the Fernbrook with her husband to see her mother, Mrs. Florence Rolison, and take her back to Ohio for a first look at the new ranchhome which she and Major John Helfrich had recently purchased. Mrs. Helfrich was excited about her new granddaughter, could scarcely wait to take her mother to Ohio for a visit with the family.

She had talked with her mother Monday night, setting the time of the visit a week ahead of the date originally planned, anticipating her mother's delight in seeing the new home in its setting of fall flowers before a killing frost should strike. Mrs. Rolison had her suitcase packed in readiness for the trip.

Mrs. Helfrich graduated from Dallas Township school in 1944. Her husband John left Dallas Township school to join the U.S. Air Force, where he rose to officer status, serving in Greenland, England, Guam. He recently retired after twenty years service.

She leaves her husband; a son John Jr.; daughters, Mrs. Miriam Weaver, Columbus, Ohio; and Cheri, at home; her mother, Fernbrook; two grandchildren; a brother William Rolison, Kingston.

Burial was in the family plot at Woodlawn Cemetery, from a Luzerne funeral home.

He had been looking forward to the hunting season. On Friday he purchased his hunting license, to be ready for small game and deer season. He was an enthusiastic hunter and fisherman.
