Old Log Cabin Acquired

By Pa. State Museum

Pennsylvania State Museum's year long search for an early 19th century log cabin has ended.

W. Fred Kinsey III, chief curator, said a "perfect" example was donated by Harold Irvine, of Loysville RD 1, Perry County.

The structure was dismantled and moved to a storage warehouse near Harrisburg. It will be rebuilt as a "gunshop" in the William Penn Memorial Museum now under construction north of the Capitol.

Kinsey said there were 25 replies to a plea for such a cabin published in central Pennsylvania newspapers last summer. The Irvine cabin was selected because of its size, the excellent preservation of the wood, and the unusual expertise of the carpentry.

It measures 16 by 14 feet, with each of the logs held by pegs and close-fitting dovetail ends. It was constructed about 1812 by Adam Henry Sheaffer.

Sheaffer's grandson, Clarence N. Sheaffer, of Loysville RD 1, also is a carpenter. He lived in the cabin during his youth.

"The only money we had came from our insurance company"

Some months ago a woman wrote to her insurance company (a company we represent) to say that the only money the family had during her husband's long illness, were the insurance checks she received.

It's true that nothing can bring money troubles faster than a bad accident or long illness that prevents a worker from working and earning. That's when a substitute insurance income is desperately needed. The policy that can provide that money is DISABILITY INCOME insurance. For any covered sickness or accident (and most ARE covered), this policy keeps a tax-free monthly check coming your way when your family wage-earner is disabled. May we tell you more about DISABILITY INCOME insurance?
