Women Of Rotary Ask Support Of Program

Dallas Women of Rotary at their initial meeting of the year voted to continue their support of Ahban Unvalla, a young girl from India who has been studying in Philadelphia for several months.

This group provides wheelchairs and walkers for area people who are incapacitated, free of charge. The Wheelchair Project has grown over the years until there are now 35 chairs, 14 walkers and 3 pairs of crutches in circulation.

Since 1956, the Club has bought 5 wheelchairs and one walker on wheels with crutches attached. Every piece of equipment is in constant use.

To help support these projects and other welfare activities, a bake sale of homemade breads, cakes, cookies, pies, candies, etc., will be held on November 8 at the Jackson Fire Hall in conjunction with the annual turkey dinner served by Dallas Rotarians. Mrs. Carl Henderson, Chairman of Ways and Means, and Mrs. Donald Peterson, co-chairman, are in charge. Assisting them will be Mesdames Daniel Chapman, Hanford Eckman, Bruno Gruppo, Lester Hauck, Stanley Hozempa, Lester Jordan, and Anthony Marchakitus.

It's Highway 81 Not Penn-Can

In order to provide continuity of a uniform marking pattern for the traveling public's convenience and guidance, identification of Interstate highways has been restricted to numerical designations by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads.

This explains why the Pennsylvania Department of Highways will not honor frequent requests to name interstate roads and interchanges after prominent citizens, historical events or leading industries.

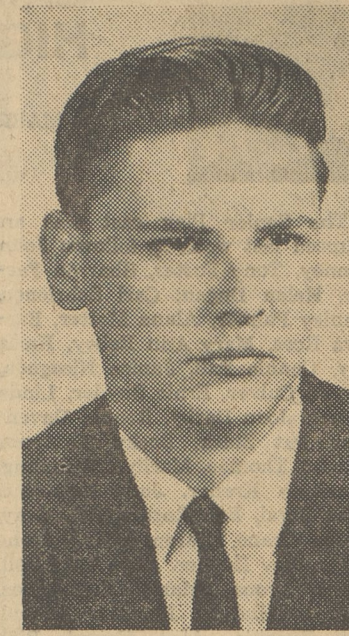

However, local or regional interests often lead to referral of these roads by the outmoded, but romantic naming after local customs, traditions or industries. The so-called "Penn-Can-Highway" (Interstate 81) is an example. On all official maps and signs, however, the numerical designation is retained.

The wisdom of holding to this numerical designation becomes evident when the names "Anthracite Expressway" and "Cumberland Valley Freeway" are used to refer to the same highway, Interstate 81.

Wyoming Valley Motor Club's domestic travel department reports that a great deal of confusion results from this. People looking for signs leading to the "Penn-Can Highway" understand that this road is officially Interstate 81. Another example of the name-number confusion is Pennsylvania's U. S. 322, which the Legislature chose to memorialize the 23rd Division. The same road is also known as the "Lake-to-Sea Highway."

One local example, "Anthracite Expressway" seems a bit absurd in view of all the considerable effort extended by local interests in attracting new and diverse industries to an area which has been trying for many years to avoid being identified as a one-industry region. All Learning Is Continuous

Ralston Says Don't Ignore The Obvious

A group of 150 parents attended Westmoreland Elementary PTA meeting Tuesday, approving the budget by the finance committee, Glenn Howell, chairman. Included was enough for a trip to Philadelphia by children in the sixth grade. Students of all grades are selling candy to increase the fund. Order forms for candy are to be returned to the school before Thanksgiving to insure delivery before Christmas.

Mrs. Ben Davis, Jr., presented Mr. John Mulhern, principal, who read a letter from William A. Austin with regard to the milk problem. Children may no longer have chocolate milk, he said without written authorization from home.

Mrs. Davis announced the election of Mrs. James D. Gardiner as recording secretary. Mrs. Robert Brown and Mrs. Edwin Thompson were presented as co-chairmen of hospitality; Mrs. Alex Covert and Mrs. George Shaver, Jr., of membership.

George Ralston, Dean of Men at Wilkes College, began his talk by saying that problems of today are not likely to be greatly affected by such things as buildings or a change of curriculum. "We tend, all of us," he said, "to overlook the obvious." He stated that there is a need to reduce things to simple fundamentals. "I am not concerned with programs but with our spirit of approach."

Mr. Ralston said education needs to rediscover the laws of learning. Learning itself is a continual process representing individual growth from self-centeredness to outer-centeredness. It involves the relationship between child and home; child and school; and child and community.

What are the laws of learning? First, Readiness. Without being ready to learn, learning is impossible. Discipline is all-important. "Parents, the school and the whole community add up to the law of readiness," he said.

Second: What is taught must be understood or it is not learned; Dean Ralston then cited examples of college math testing which proved that many students did not really learn what was being taught. Finally: Exercise, which involves working at the job, reviewing, putting into practice.

Education is a return to fundamental principles. No matter what a child does, he must do it well. Dean Ralston defined a good teacher as one who loves his students and does not require more of them than of himself. A good teacher must be an example of conscience, he said, for a teacher affects eternity.

Mr. Ralston then read a poem "education," about Mark Hopkins, and concluded with, "Technicians we need, but philosophers we must have."

New York's Jamestown is the hub of a double Magic Circle auto tour around the long-famed Chautauque region. First of the sightseeing dividends comes at Westfield, the grape juice capital, and noted for its antique shops and picturesque 1828 Barcelona Harbor lighthouse.

Chautauque Lake, a 19-mile long finger of blue water, is alive with sail and power boats. Chautauque Institution and its nostalgic nerve-center village have flourished since 1874. Each summer the population jumps from 350 to 12,000—many returning every year for the art festivals, symphonies and jazz, religious events, ballet, plays, lectures and classes. Jamestown, a furniture capital since 1813, is the pivotal point and business center for both Chautauque Lake and 58,000-acre Allegany State Park. The Park, reached by New York's "Scenic Seventeen" highway, is a forested playground offering swimming, sunbathing, horseback riding, canoeing in a mountain setting. The return is via Olean, remembered by baseball fans as the place where John J. McGraw organized his first team; Rock City park and its weird quartz formations; the old town of Bradford in Pennsylvania; and back through the southern part of Allegany Park, a primitive woodland area favored by anglers, camping motorists and bicyclists.

Increasing Registration For Course In Writing At Dallas Evening School

A new course at Dallas Adult Evening School is attracting an increasing number of people. Registrations are still being accepted for the seminar in Creative Writing, taught by Robert M. Hukill.

A number of college graduates are listed among those who signed for the course. The program, completely informal in character, has no intention of teaching fundamentals of good English usage. It is expected that anybody who signs up knows the technique of English composition, and has the basic knowledge of good spelling, punctuation, paragraphing, etc.

Add to this, the prime requisite of having something to say, and knowing how to say it. The class could use a few more people.

A wide range of interests brings a writer attacking the problem in a different way, and each choosing an individual approach. Each Monday evening, Mr. Hukill sets a disc spinning and broadcasts to Robert Frost, William Faulkner, or other authors, to demonstrate specific points in writing.

The second half of the evening is given to reading aloud of manuscripts prepared by members of the class. There is no compulsion. If a member does not wish to read a prepared piece, she remains silent. Anybody who submits material is braced to receive suggestions or criticism, with the understanding that no two people ever write alike, and that writing is the most revealing thing in the world.

Down to earth, idealistic, pure reporting, home-spun philosophy... the writing is as different as the people who tap the typewriter, submit hand-written stories, or take it out in making copious notes in a loose-leaf folder.

To date, registrations include these names: Mrs. Dana Crump, Mrs. Earl Phillips, Mrs. James Green, Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. B. Hicks, Mrs. Barbara Evans, Mrs. Dorothy Peiffer, Regina Gallagher, and William Morgan. The course was launched as a trial balloon, with no expectation that it would be of general interest. Six people registered the first evening. One was obliged to drop out when

Boat-House Windows Smashed With Rocks

Windows in ten Harveys Lake boat-houses were smashed last week. The vandals are working at night, throwing stones from cars, according to Police Chief Edgar Hughes.

The chief assumes this to be the work of youngsters, and issues a warning to them that, if they are caught, they will be taken to Juvenile Court.

He does not think that the recent vandalism has any connection with the smashing of an expensive picture window in a home on Outlet Road last week.
