HALLOWE'EN VISITORS

Hallowe'en brought two sets of visitors to our door. Friendly when you got behind those deceiving masks! The first carload consisted of Mark and Jacqueline VanTuyle, Mike and Karen Hronich. They spoke pieces and sang songs and we donated to their treat bags.

Emily VanTuyle and Jean Hronich sat out in Emily's car so as not to make any adult interference. They would have been welcome because they are nice people too!

The other carload was only one family — Janet Dymond's five: Richard, Brenda, and Robert who have just started in kindergarten. Their mother came in with them as a kind of coordinator for their exuberance. Robby was fascinated with the hum coming up through the pipeless furnace register. He laid his head flat on the floor to listen to the circulating fans in the heat distributing pipes. Janet has her hands full with those busy bees, but they are capable hands.

APPRECIATED LETTER

I noted in last week's Dallas Post a nice letter from the sister of John Hoppes of Valley Crest. I had seen a letter of her's posted on the window of the office of the Director of Nurses, Mrs. Gold. I know that the staff people at Valley Crest appreciate such correspondence, for they are a dedicated group and do many unsung deeds every day among those patients. This sister, Mrs. Clarence Montross, has made a beautiful tribute to those workers. It has been my pleasure to visit with John Hoppes twice every week. He is a quiet, pleasant and friendly chap.

THIS MARINE IS READY

One sign that the western hemispherical tension has let up was the appearance last Saturday of "our marine" Gene LaBar sauntering along our road with shot gun over his arm. Hunting season and our annual turkey supper are sure to bring him this way if at all possible. He was wearing camouflage suit but had on a red jacket so that he was not entirely invisible. We were just having breakfast and Gene could sit and have a cup of black coffee. I think the marines should get out a dictionary of marine English vocabulary or something. Most picturesque. I had to stop him and ask for interpretation of terms, such as "rack" which in our language is bed. His outfit had been all packed up for the past week, ready to go and do what marines do.

OFF TO AFRICA

This paper comes out on Thursday and I am writing this Saturday. Unless something comes up to hinder we will be taking Dottie and Cathy to the bus after voting time Tuesday morning. They will go to New York together where Cathy will see Dottie off for Africa. Cathy will return Wednesday. It was a glad bit of news Dottie's doctor gave her last week that she could go now and he gave her a certificate of health, and she's been busy getting ready since. Now, can you all read this as past tense whereas I am writing it as I expect it will be by the time you get this?
