Miss Dorrance Brings To Life The Editor of Godey's Lady Book

Under Miss Frances Dorrance's skillful fingers, the editor of Godey's Lady Book emerged as a woman far in advance of her times Monday afternoon at the April meeting of the Book Club.

Known best for her fashion designs, Sarah Joseph Buell Hale was far in the forefront of the growing movement to recognize women as partners in the world of affairs, not mere appendages to their husbands. Offered editorship of a Philadelphia magazine, Mrs. Hale edited it from Boston, not wishing to leave her home while her son was still at Harvard. She endorsed the "Own Your Own Home" movement in 1840 in Godey's Lady Book; used its pages to promote Elizabeth Blackwell as a woman doctor in an age when women were not accepted in the medical profession; and struck a strong blow for health when she designed fashions which discredited the wasp waist. Miss Dorrance showed thirty framed prints lent her for the occasion by Modesta Ximena, and brought many of her own bound volumes of the priceless publication, as well as books loaned by Mrs. Bruce Pavne.

At a table decorated with pink geraniums and tall white tapers, Mrs. Arch Rutherford and Mrs. J. P. DeWitt poured for Mesdames Carl Henderson, J. F. Sallada, Clyde Davis, Thomas M. Lewis, Stanley B. Davies, John C. Phillips, Ray Flick, Peter D. Clark, Charles L. Hosler, Mitchell Jenkins, Norwood Brader, Walter Mokyhcic, Fred Howell, Dana Crump, J. H. D. Ferguson, A. D. Hutchison, Mae Townend, Stewart Ferguson, Laning Harvey Jr., Margaret Stevie, Charles Frantz, Paul Gross, Willard Seaman; Frances Dorrance and Elizabeth Ryder.

Revolution In Suits

Spring suits are in the center of a fashion revolution. Everything's changing. Suits look like dresses, like shirts, like sweaters, like costumes.

The "Open-Air" suit is jaunty, casual... ready to move freely into the new season. Jackets are barely shaped, necklines are open, often filled in with coordinated overblouses. Sleeves are narrowed to above wrist and then widened and cuff-linked. Skirts are eased with inverted front pleat or gathered waistband.

The tunic suit has a longer, shapely line, dramatized with a minimum of detail, nude necklines, skinny sleeves, balanced with the narrow skirt.

The shirt suit is as easy, and nonchalant as a blouse and skirt. Women's Wear Daily notes. Tops often slip over the head, waistlines are belted in overblouse fashion, sleeves blouse on shirt cuffs. Skirts are skinny.

The "sweater" suit directs the non-traditional suit look, often resembling a two-piece dress. Jacket closings move to the back; necklines copy the sweater with cowl and stove-pipe emphasis. Shirt-cuffs here, too... all kinds of skirt ease.
