With the famous story about Mark Twain in mind Sunday morning, the quandary could probably have been resolved neatly and expeditiously by just sending the missing spare parts across the street with instructions to return them in fifteen minutes.

When Mark Twain was reproved by his wife for having forgotten to put on his tie before calling on a neighbor, he was not taken aback, but he did take measures. With his customary aplomb, he fixed things right up, doubtless leaving his wife frothing at the mouth.

Dispatching the necktie in a neat little box, by messenger, he wrote on the cover, "Please look at this necktie for forty minutes and return to Samuel Clemens."

Having been brought up to consider it bad manners to make any excuses whatsoever for laxness in housekeeping or personal appearance, I welcomed a very lovely neighbor to a kitchen which was clearly going places in a great hurry, or had been struck by a tornado, with what shreds of social poise it was possible to gather.

Backing up toward the sink in a nonchalant manner, the stance concealed the coffee cup, the eggshells, and the dinner plate, left over from Saturday night's hasty meal.

But it did nothing to conceal the faded bathrobe, and less than nothing to conceal the patent absence of the China Clippers which normally pad out a face to a reasonable semblance of a human being.

That's what you get when the phone rings early in the morning on Mother's Day, and you practically fall down the backstairs trying to reach the receiver before the bell stops buzzing.

It is all too easy to stay downstairs in whatever you happen to have slung on while on the gallop, girding it hastily about you as you run. And it's simple enough to snatch a cup of coffee without benefit of China Clippers, as coffee requires no chewing.

And then there's that article in the Readers Digest, the one you promised yourself to finish last night before becoming sleep-stricken.

And the surreptitious survey of the back yard to see if the lilacs escaped the frost.

And that second and bootleg cup of coffee.

And a dip into the box of Mother's Day chocolates to see if the assortment included a merciful percentage of bonbons without nuts.

And where has the time gone, it can't possibly be that late.

And it's all too easy to say, "Well, you OUGHT to be ready at any moment, so that if the Queen of England happens to drop in, she can inspect the kitchen sink and compare it with her own housekeeping." Or, "You know better than to come downstairs minus your equipment."

And speaking of chocolates, wonder how many boxes of Mother's Day chocolates melted in the rural mailboxes during the hot weather before the cold snap late Friday night?

Hold everything, Mae, here come the Clippers!

Honorable Mention In Contest

Two residents of the Dallas area have won honorable mention in the ATLANTIC MONTHLY'S 42nd Annual Creative Writing Contest for College Students. Students of College Misericordia and members of the Creative Writing class taught by Sister M. Denise, R.S.M., they are: Elaine Lawrence (at left) of Swoyerville who submitted a short story, "Weep, Willow, Weep," and Mrs. Prentice Lacy, West Dallas who submitted a research paper "Dramatic Irony in the Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tales."

These winning manuscripts were chosen from the 20 top essays, and the 20 top stories of all the work sent by college students from all parts of the country.

The Wells had intended to return to the Back Mountain this week. Mrs. Wells would appreciate hearing from her friends. Address her mail to Kissimmee Hospital, Kissimmee Florida.

The Dallas Post Has Hundreds of Modern Type Faces To Select From

Editorially Speaking:

What's The Issue?

Lots of attention is being devoted to a snow-balling fracas, in which many well-meaning people are being con- ded into sounding off about ill-defined problems.

It all started when the Post reported a beating of a student by several others. Following on it, rumors and fuzzy allusions to our "juvenile delinquency" problem apparently became the journalistic rage.

At least some sense was lent to the situation when a report of supposed police comment on the vicious nature of Dallas teenagers was squashed the next day.

But parents took the bait, and wild letters, mostly unsigned, are now being traded like bubble-gum cards, somehow linking "gang-wars" and bus flat tires with Key Club and School Board.

What is the issue here, anyway?
