From The Vatican To The Bull Fight, Dale And John Enjoy Last Days

Probably it will come as a surprise to both Dale Mosier and John Parry that they are still in Rome, and they will wonder if they can be in two places at once, Europe and the United States. But Dale's letters, brought by his mother, Mrs. Sheldon Mosier, neatly typed and double spaced, are too good to waste.

On the verge of leaving for home, Dale writes:

We are now in Rome, staying in an old churchyard which has been converted into student-living quarters. It costs us 48c a night; so we snatched on to it in a hurry. In fact it was so crowded the first night that we could not get a room. This is the most famous hotel among the Americans and the place is filled. I was surprised to see so many Americans. Every place you go you run into them. I wonder that I hadn't heard more about Americans traveling in Europe before. The first night we decided to really rough it and save some money, so we slept in a park overlooking the Coliseum. We walked around and saw Rome by night till about 1:00 o'clock and we were amazed at the beauty of the city. It was all lit up. We went to all sorts of trouble to pick out a secluded spot to spend the night, only to wake up the next morning and find that about fifteen were in the same area and had washed in the many fountains.

We really enjoyed Rome. You cannot imagine how many old ruins there were. Just about every place you looked you could see an old Corinthian pillar or part of an old temple to the Gods. The city preserves them by building around, over, or on them. We saw the Coliseum, Forum, Apian Way, Pantheon and many other ruins. We spent parts of several days in the Vatican and its museum.

The first day we just happened to walk by a church a couple of blocks from the Vatican, where a lot of people were collected and several bands were playing. We stopped in time to see them bring a large altar out of the church and place it upon wheels to enable it to join the procession. They told us that the altar was being taken up to St. Peter's in the long procession headed by children dressed as angels and horse riders to be blessed by the Pope. We quickly ran up to the Vatican and sure enough after a few minutes the procession came by and the Pope appeared at his window to bless the altar and the crowd. We were standing by the cameramen; so they took our pictures while shooting scenes of the crowd packed in St. Peter's Square.

The next day we went inside St. Peter's Basilica and were amazed at its beauty. It is the largest church in the world, yet there isn't an obvious bare spot. We found it to be the most beautiful we have ever seen.

The first room you see is the meeting place of the "Concili", done in red velvet, with beautiful frescoes and archways. You can really see the masterwork of Michelangelo's plans, the way the light comes through in the side domes. We were also amazed to find that all the paintings except one were really mosaics. We climbed up to the top of St. Peter's dome and got a wonderful view of the church both inside and out. We then went to the Museum where the Sistine Chapel, Raphael's Room and other masterpieces were located. We were deeply impressed by the former two. We had a book with us about the art, but we would try to figure it out first and then read about it.

We also went to see "Carmen", which was presented in the ruins of the "Baths of Caecalla". It was made into somewhat of a spectacle for tourists, but we still enjoyed it. We were thankful that we had decided to splurge and buy tickets for 1000 lire. That sounds like a lot of money, but it was only $1.60. We were sorry we had to leave Rome, but during our five days we got a fairly good impression of the city. We took a night train for Nice, but it was so crowded that I only got an hour or two of sleep. In our compartment were two Pennsylvania girls, one of them a sophomore at Penn State. I told her I would look her up after initiation.

We went through Nice and caught a bus to Cavalaire, where we met the family of John's in Holland. There were two cities by the same name and we could not find the house. Three French boys walked all over the town with us looking for the house. When we finally found it, the part of the family that had invited us was gone; so we only stayed there one day.

Saturday we got on the train for Spain. We arrived in Barcelona at 10:30 in the evening. We had met some Puerto Ricans on the train and they said they would help us find a good, inexpensive hotel to stay in. We finally settled on "Pension" which cost us $2.50 per day including three good meals. It was a good hotel with hot water and shower and the meals were excellent four course affairs. Tonight we just came back from a bull fight, one of the best in Spain. It is a very colorful and quick-moving sport and is cruel only in a few phases.

The city of Barcelona itself is very beautiful with many parks and fountains. It is the first city we have seen where there are large boulevards for pedestrians and small streets on the side for automated traffic. We have found Spain to be the cheapest (most inexpensive) country yet.

We have found a small town below Barcelona on the Spanish coast. We are paying $3.00 a day for sleeping and three good meals. For the first three days we really watched ourselves and didn't get too much sun but yesterday we both got a little too much, even though we had already been fairly well conditioned. I bought some cream to use and hope we don't peel. It is a shame that we don't speak Spanish because the family that owns the place and the people in it are real nice. The climate here is very dry; consequently, the vegetation is much different. For one thing the hills are very rocky, yet full of small holes where something will occasionally be growing. It could probably best be described as a semi-arid mountainous desert. The water is fairly salty, crystal clear like Evans Falls, but warm.

But our way from Barcelona we traveled with an, I'm ashamed to say, American tourist. She was complaining about how unfriendly the people were and how they tried to gyp everybody. She wondered why the Spanish didn't speak English; not why she didn't speak Spanish or even attempt to. From her and several other tourists whom we have met we can really see how the Europeans get a bad picture of the Americans.

We are leaving here tomorrow for Barcelona, where John will catch a train for Amsterdam and I will get one for Gottingen to visit with the Brandt family whom I had visited before. On the 8th I will catch a train to Amsterdam where I will be staying with John until we sail on the 11th from Rotterdam.

It will only be about 1 1/2 weeks now before I return to good ole America. I am looking forward to it, now that our trip is over for all purposes. It really seems strange
