IRATE MOTORIST

Sunday night the speed trap was in operation again on Pioneer Avenue. Shortly after it began, an indignant pair arrived at the magistrate's to protest their innocence.

Loudly and bitterly they cajoled the officer who stopped them proclaiming their strict adherence to all safe driving rules.

Then they turned on the officer. Could a civilian prefer charges against a policeman? The answer was yes, although grounds for such action were debatable.

They did not come from our area, were dead set on beating the rap, would not admit any guilt, and yet they referred to themselves as law-abiding citizens.

If the law is not enforced, innocent people suffer and yet many will try by every conceivable means to fight and circumvent its enforcement.

Well, it takes all kinds to make a world.

OUT OF THE PAST

Thursday afternoon we had to go to Bloomsburg. I prefer the back route through Benton, eliminating the heavy traffic of the river drive, but my good spouse thought it might be nice to stop and visit a friend in Berwick.

Coming back the other way, I was surprised to see old vintage railway cars clustered on a siding, probably dating back to Civil War days, coaches which may well have carried troops to the front lines and a U. S. Mail coach with its tiny windows, reminiscent of the days when robberies by outlaw bands stirred up excitement along the western plains.

We did not have time to stop but surmised that the well preserved relics were slated for a private owner, who would use the picturesque panorama to the best possible advantage.

HE KNOWS HIS SUBJECT

Last week a bit of pertinent historical data was needed at our house. The usual sources were tapped and found wanting and then I called Don Evans, teacher of "Principles of Democracy."
