FEAR OF FIRECRACKERS AND THUNDER

By Bob Bartos, Manager Friskies Pet Foods Research Center

Both thunderstorms and Fourth of July firecrackers can turn even the bravest, most stalwart dog into a cringing coward. Hunting dogs, used to the report of shotguns, as well as city dogs who don't turn a hair at the sound of a car's backfire, are set aquiver from the tips of their tails to their noses at the sound of firecrackers exploding around them or thunder exploding above them. And fear of these sounds doesn't necessarily start at puppyhood. Many dogs will ignore storms for years until a particularly nasty one breaks, and from that day on they're tremblers. In fact, if the fear is great enough, it actually can cause fits.

If your dog shows stress at such times, it is advisable to consult your veterinarian. He can give you sedatives that will quiet your dog. And since most dogs apprehend storms an hour or two before they strike, you can get him calmly down before the really big bangs break. Then let your pet pick his own safe retreat and, after some pats and comforting words, leave him alone. He'll likely sleep through the noise.

Above all, don't take your dog out during a thunderstorm or when firecrackers are popping. And do let the outdoor-living dog in the house for the duration of the disturbance. It's the only humane thing to do.

Feeding tip: Dogs need less food generally in summer. Give your pet a quality prepared food such as Friskies, and even though you've cut down on his rations, you're certain that he's getting all the proteins, vitamins and minerals he needs.
