YOUR HEALTH

Sugar appeases hunger and consequently there tends to be a smaller consumption of nutritionally superior foods.

Sugar is used directly as food and also in baked goods, confectionery, canned foods, preserves and soft drinks.

There are various scientific names for sugar including sucrose, glucose, fructose, lactose, and maltose. Brown sugar, corn syrup, honey, maple syrup and maple contain small amounts of calcium and iron. Honey contains small amounts of some of the B vitamins and vitamin C.

The sugar of commerce and the kitchen is sucrose, obtained from plants such as cane sugar and sugar beets.
