

The

Dallas Post

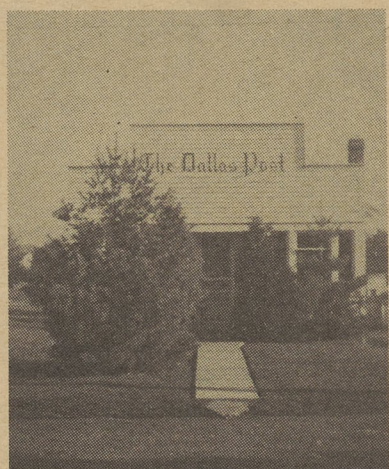

on its

75th Anniversary

presents this

Back Mountain

Progress Commemorative Issue

GROWTH OF A DYNAMIC COMMUNITY

A WORD ABOUT THESE PICTURES:

Sign at top was located at corner of old Main Road (Main Street) and Franklin Street. (Telephone number of the Post then was 300.) On principle that billboards were a highway evil, Howard Risley took it down.

Artist's rendition of the old Post building, top left, shows the Post building at corner of Huntsville Road and Norton Avenue, now Paul Shaver's garage. Post was printed there from the 1890's until about 1925, when editor W. B. Fine moved back to Main Street.

Center left, the Post building on Lehman Avenue as it looked originally. A corporation, L. A. McHenry, Claude T. Isaacs, and G. Harold Wagner, ran it, and Howard Risley became managing editor in 1929. Present Dallas Post, with two wings added to the original building. Some of our older employees liked it better. Other way, they say.