CHURCH STREET, DALLAS

Trinity Presbyterian Church Under Roof Ahead Of Snow

The vast arches are in place, and the roof now covers the rising edifice of the Trinity Lutheran Church, well in advance of early fall snows. This progress is an answer to prayer. Exceptionally mild weather has prevailed, and rains, though sadly needed by drought-stricken farmers, have held off until the new church is protected.

The church on top of the highest hill in Dallas has a view second to none. Completed, it will dominate the landscape.

The unit now under construction is but one of the three successive stages contemplated, says Rev. Andrew Pillarella.

The rapidly growing congregation, siphoning off some Presbyterians who have been worshipping in the Valley churches, and attracting newcomers who have had no previous church affiliation is waiting hopefully for the interior to be finished so that it may move from the Dallas Junior High School Auditorium to its new quarters.

Now that the roof is in place, interior work can go forward speedily, with carpenters protected from the weather, which is bound to worsen before it takes a turn for the better.

There is a challenge to becoming an integral part of a new church even more of a challenge than there is to remodeling an old structure.

The congregation is finding the enthusiasm, coupled with the hard cold cash, to carry the whole undertaking to a triumphant conclusion. It is a cause for true thanksgiving that the work has been blessed with good weather and sufficient funds to make such phenomenal head way.

Next Thanksgiving, the congregation will worship in its own church.

Mr. Taylor makes a hobby of collecting good paintings for exhibition in the bank, a contribution to his avowed intention of making the building a pleasant place to visit.

John Huber, the Kingston artist, painted against difficulties. As he progressed with his work, more and more leaves fell off the surrounding trees, and more and more of the edifice came into view.

By the time he finished, the White Church on the Hill was revealed in all its classic New England simplicity.

Another of Mr. Huber's paintings hangs on the walls of the bank, a picture of a beautiful old building outside of New Hope, the mecca of art lovers and historians.

Mr. Huber started out as a sculptor, but because of a heart ailment was obliged to abandon the heavy work. Turning to painting, he studied at New York School of Applied Arts, and spent another year at the Art Students League.

Aunt Allie Honeywell, Aged 101, Was Born Before End Of Civil War

When an old lady reaches the age of 101, she makes news, no matter where she lives. The century mark is seldom reached, and almost never in these parts, though oldersters of 95 are not as uncommon as you might think.

When an old lady who was born in Dallas before the close of the Civil War, dies in Luzerne, it is Back Mountain News.

Mrs. Alphretta Welch Honeywell, 101 on July 17, died Wednesday morning at her home in Luzerne, the home at 431 Charles Street which she and her husband Clinton purchased in 1908. Mr. Honeywell died twenty years ago.

A cousin Sherman Dilley, of Marlton, N.J. is over 100 years old, but the Welch family connection seems to have died off in the main.

The Clinton Honeywells had no children. But a niece of "Aunt Allie" Mrs. Harry Allen, a former Honeywell, lives at Harveys Lake.

One of Mrs. Allen's happiest memories as a child is of Aunt Allie's huge willow wicker basket filled with molasses popcorn balls, a Christmas custom of Aunt Allie's that took weeks of preparation. She and her husband popped and popped, and then boiled down the molasses. Every child who came to the house at Christmas time went away with a popcorn ball, Aunt Allie's contribution to the joyful season.

The Welch homestead where Alphretta was born, was on Huntsville Road, part of the acreage reaching clear to Overbrook Road, in disputed territory between Dallas Boro and Dallas Township when the split came at the time the Borough was formed. The contention is a matter of history, based presumably upon the school question.

The house in which Alphretta was born, and where her parents John and Susan Hought Welch lived for years, was revamped and faced with stucco when it passed into other hands. The Wallo family purchased it, and it was at this time that the development into building lots was accomplished.

The old Welch barn was remodelled into the American Legion Home which was destroyed by fire some years ago.

Dan Waters remembers, as a very small boy, that his father and John Welch used to discuss crops, and that Mr. Welch could never be persuaded to believe that corn actually grew to a height of twelve feet in Iowa. Mr. Welch, trusting in the weather instead of in fertilizer, could always blame the poor potatoes on the wet weather or the dry weather, depending on how the season turned out. He had extensive acreage, but it did not produce as much as it would have today, by employment of modern methods and feeding of the soil.

John was a very old man at the time Dan knew him, heavy set and

Painting Of Church Unveiled In Bank

A beautiful painting of "The White Church on the Hill" was unveiled last Wednesday afternoon at Luzerne National Bank. Many members and other residents of the Back Mountain were present at the ceremony, which was presided over by bank manager William Taylor.

John H. Welch, born in 1828, moved to Jackson Township in 1860 where he pursued his trade of blacksmith for one year before moving to Dallas and turning entirely to farming his 128 acres.

The union of John and Susan was blessed with eight children, of whom Alphretta was the last survivor.

Services for Alphretta were conducted on Saturday from a funeral home in Luzerne. Rev. Clarence Andrews of Luzerne Methodist Church officiating. Burial was in the family plot in Fort-Port Cemetery.
