It Does No Good!
My observation is that paragrahs about roadside littering do no good. For I don't believe that people who litter our otherwise beautiful roadsides ever read the high class literature of The Dallas Post. Readers of The Dallas Post would never think they had to drink beer while riding through our nature-blessed country roads. Readers of The Dallas Post would never think of tossing empty beer cans, big brown quart-size beer bottles, or ice cream containers along the public highway. Readers of The Dallas Post are very particular to keep all rubbish inside their cars until they get home and then put it in a proper container for disposal. Some readers of The Dallas Post take their dogs for walks along much loved highways and because they see the desecration of these walkways by all kinds of rubbish, tin cans, broken glass they would not think of adding to the mess. One wonders if it might do the "cause" more good to leave the dog at home and carry along a bag and with gloved hands gather up a quantity of cut glass and unwanted cans and take it home to get rid of it through proper channels.

Well, anyway, you see how I feel and I'm not going to write anything about this rubbish in The Dallas Post simply because Dallas Post readers are not rubbish-tossers-out-of-cars and it would not do any good to tell them about the littering public. How does one get the ear or eye of people who drink while riding out where Nature lives?
Last Thursday I was on my way home from Valley Crest and had to stop in Exeter to officiate at a funeral home. But I was early -- and sleepy (as I always am after meals!) So I pulled to the curb along Wyoming avenue and thought I'd go over the funeral service in the quiet of the traffic for a few minutes. But my eyes dropped shut, and my mind took a rest, until I heard someone at my elbow asking me if I felt all right. For the moment as I glimpsed the uniformed officer at my window I thought it was Mike Skubic, chief security officer at Valley Crest! But it was an alert Wyoming cop taking note of a figure at the wheel who looked kinda slumped. I thanked him and told him I was fine. How much just that much sleep perks me up! Much better to have the car parked than moving at such a time. No, that wasn't due to my age. I've always taken forty winks after lunch if possible. Used to do it during recitations in Prof. Gillott's Greek class 50 years ago. That was far more dangerous than in a parked car on the Avenue. I might have been called on to translate the next line in Greek!
