Twenty YMCA Day Campers Learn To Swim, Have Great Fun

by DEBBIE ROGERS

To most kids summer means camp, and to a small group of Back Mountain youngsters this summer means the YMCA camp at Fanti's Park.

There are twenty boys and girls in the camp, and they manage to keep their counselors hopping from 9:30 to 3:30 daily.

The camp day starts with devotions, usually an inspirational story. The Troop cousins, Diane and Lois, say they like devotions best of all the activities at camp. Lois, a wiry, tanned youngster who doesn't look like the type to prefer devotions to more active pursuits, also admits to being fond of badminton.

The second order of the day is exercise, twenty minutes of toe-touches, knee bends, and such, calculated to make the campers stronger if not happier. Seven-year-old Jay Hill thinks he is benefiting from the exercises but adds that he can't always make it 'way to his toes.

At 10 o'clock elective camping begins. Campers are allowed to choose among archery, games, crafts, boating, and nature study. Most of the boys take archery; the girls prefer crafts.

Allen Gosart is one of the best of the aspiring Robin Hoods. Last session's Outstanding Campers proudly boasts a bullseye, a feat matched by few. Eyre Price adds shyly that he at least has hit the target.

Arts and crafts is Nancy Samuels' elective. In three weeks she has made a fish bag, a lanyard, and many other things.

Swimming is the most important activity at the camp. The aim is to have all the youngsters swimming well before the end of the session. Evidence of the success of the drive is the fact that of nine non-swimmers who started camp only five remain in that category.

Jaye Troop, seven, is officially a non-swimmer but expects to graduate to middle swimmer very soon. Jackie Schmidt also hopes to advance, but unless he recovers from the stomach aches that strike him at swim time each day he'll never make it.

The girls have different ideas about swimming. Barbara Lupu, for example, likes swimming, but not the water. Linda Kicher is a bit braver; she only objects if the water is cold.

The highest award at the camp is the lake badge. Available only to deep swimmers, it is earned by swimming the quarter mile-wide lake without stopping. They are accompanied by two counselors in a boat as they make their attempt.

Dan Shannon is one of the latest lake swimmers. Swimming every conceivable stroke, moving in circles and tangents more often than straight lines, he made it across with a minimum of trouble. Rowed home in triumph, he quickly joined friend Kevin Stetsen and others in swim exercises.

The climax at each camping session is the overnight stay at the camp. Every youngster cites this as his favorite aspect of camp. Martin Kaye and Karen Kitchen can think of nothing else.

On camp-out day there are tents to be pitched, firesplaces to be built, wood to be gathered. Perhaps a hike will be in order. Dinner will be eaten in the open, and later there will be songs and stories around the campfire.

It will be a day to live up to all expectations, the highlight of a wonderful camp session and a happy summer.
