Shenandoah Valley
 (ON LEAVE.)
 I
 I must not forget
 The beauty of this road I ride,
 The far blue rim of hills
 That ever-varying goes beside.
 I must remember
 These wide-halled homes, and the wet
 Green sweeps of pasture land
 Where sleek red cattle contemplative stand.

II
 I must not forget
 The fragrant cooling breath
 Of every wooded ridge,
 The laughing little crystal brooks we bridge;
 I must paint them all on my memory.
 I must not let
 Any wayward word or wayside fret
 Mar the magic of their beauty.

III
 I must remember
 How the hills draw near until
 Their blue is now rich tapestry
 Of light and darker greens; how still
 Another far blue line is pencilled on the sky,
 Again draws near and passes by.

IV
 I must not forget
 How dusk weaves a veil of sheerest gauze
 That caressingly lingers, a drowsy pause
 While the sun spins scarves of rosy amber
 To curtain his kingly-portal chamber,
 And a bird in a treetop over and over
 Flutes a honeyed call to a hidden lover
 'Til dark spreads her coverlet.

V
 I shall not forget—
 I shall hold them precious
 And carry them with me when I go
 To the burnt brown plains
 Where the hot winds blow,
 And no far hills notch the sky's bold blue,
 And no gay brooks run bantering through.

VI
 All the roads, old and new,
 May be gallantly met,
 Nor the fleet-winged years
 Hold aught of threat,
 While I treasure this memory.
