Back Mountain Water Is Hard Put To Keep Up With Population Boom

Editor's note: Following is extracted from a report on Back Mountain sewage and water problems presented not too long back by the League of Women Voters to Women of Kiwanis. Since we already covered the matter of sewage and the alternatives of the Weston Report (alternative of systems serving Dallas Borough and Township and Kingston Township) in a recent story in the Post, we turn directly to the report on water.

Clearly, the water supply has been hard put to keep up with the 76 per cent increase in population of the Back Mountain in the last thirty years.

"The water supply for the Back Mountain Area is furnished by 13 water companies. They get water from 40 wells, 10 springs and a little from the Rulison Evans Reservoir at Huntsville. There are many sections in the Water system that receive excellent service but, because of various deficiencies throughout other parts, the overall water service in Back Mountain could be considerably improved.

"There is a definite need for a more adequate water supply and improved distribution. Most of the water companies operating today were formed to supply water to specific developments only, and no provisions were made for expansion or fire protection. The advantage of having fire hydrants is enjoyed by only 36% of the public water customers in Back Mountain (this is as of 1962). In most cases the water systems are not capable, nor were they designed to produce and deliver the volume of water required at present.

"Many of the companies are conscientiously attempting to maintain acceptable service despite inadequate facilities and increasing demand for water. Of the 46 miles of water mains, 56.6% were found to be less than 3 inches in diameter and this is substandard. The existing storage capacity in 1961 was only about one-third the needed capacity in 1962 and water demands have grown since then.

"Since there is the possibility that the ground water sources (the wells and springs) may prove inadequate, it is recommended by the Luzerne County Planning Commission that studies be made of the Harvey's Lake water supply potential, perhaps as part of the study being made by the U. S. Corps of Engineers on the Susquehanna River Basin. Another source would be the Francis Slocum State Park. Also constructing impounding facilities and collecting stream water during periods of excess flow should be considered. This impounded water could supplement ground water supplies during drier periods.

"Companies in the Back Mountain Area, each with similar problems and each trying to correct them by individual means, cooperative effort should result in a more capable water system, probably with lower unit costs. The minimum charge for each Back Mountain Water Company is more than one and one-half times greater than the rate of the Pennsylvania Gas and Water Company.

"Lack of public sewers and the characteristic of the soil permitting little absorption presents the possibility of over-saturation and sewage flowing through a rock fissure

Sharon Phillips Enters Wellesley This Weekend

Sharon Kay Phillips, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Phillips, Macell Avenue, will be among this year's 470 freshmen at Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., where they will register on Sunday, September 12.

The arriving freshmen will come to Wellesley from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Canada, Chile, Curacao, France, Greece, Holland, Italy, Jamaica, Malaysia, Norway, Panama, Saudi Arabia, and South Viet Nam.

Sixty per cent of the class prepared for college in public schools, 36 per cent are graduates of private schools, and 4 per cent received both public and private school training. They will be the first freshman class to participate in Wellesley's new three-term program, which is designed to reduce the number of courses carried at any one time, while retaining the variety studied over the year.

On Monday and Tuesday, September 13 and 14, the freshmen will be introduced to the College community. They will meet with Miss Margaret Clapp, President of Wellesley, and with various deans of the College, and will take part in an orientation program planned to acquaint them with the College and its facilities. On Tuesday, the upperclassmen will return, and on Wednesday, September 15, Miss Clapp will preside at the Opening Convocation marking the official beginning of the 91st session of Wellesley College.

I have had many requests as to what are COOT? Coots are known to most people as Mud Hens. Hardly a body of fresh water in North America is without coots at least sometime during the year. They are easily identified by their chunky slate gray body, black heads and white bills (not money bills). They are the most aquatic members of their family and have developed flaps or lobes on their toes to aid in swimming. They swim well and dive expertly too. They are not strong fliers and when taking off from the water, they pater along for a considerable distance. Once in flight the white trailing edge of the inner wing is a conspicuous field mark. Coots are hardy and remain in northern marshes until forced out by ice. In the spring they return early, arriving soon after the first big thaw.

Their voice is loud and varied. Sound tracks of this unusual array of calls from one bird are dubbed into films and tapes to provide jungle background for movies and television.

Valley Crest Last Tuesday I stopped to look at some amateur paintings in the lobby. There were names on them and I could hardly believe those people wielded the brushes for those paintings. There was David Adams, and Richard McClary, and Antoinette, and Victoria Saba, Elizabeth Farrell, Verna Kotarski, and Josephine English. Names! But if you could see the hands of some of them -- fingers tied in knots almost. Some with but little muscular control. The art teachers who come in once a week to work with these brave people and make them think they can do something worth hanging on a wall, well, as one of our TV program people would say, "Let's give them a great big hand!"

Both for the teachers and the pupils. One blue-eyed Irish pupil with a twinkle in her eye and voice said, "I didn't dare tell them I used to teach art in Teachers College or they'd expect too much of me!" Then there is Betty Yakupscin who is learning to walk, ten steps from one door to another along the corridor, then past the door and ten more steps. And then back to therapy again. There's a verse in the Bible calling attention to different levels of progress: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings like eagles (in jet planes or rocket ships), they shall run (like Olympic athletes) and not be weary, they shall walk (like those recovering from stroke, step by step) and not faint." Not quite faint! Dear Lord, keep me always thankful for my legs, and give me strength always to put one ahead of the other. Amen.

SMOKED CHUCKS: Rout young woodchucks out of their dens by stuffing rags down escape holes and dropping a railroad flare down the last. You have to find all the holes, though. Because the woodchuck will remove rust spots from guns, rods, hooks etc.

Try-Outs Tonight And Friday For Oklahoma

Little Theatre of Wilkes-Barre continues try-outs for Oklahoma tonight, 8 to 10 p.m. Try-outs began last night.

Actors, singers and dancers from the Back Mountain are urged to appear. There are fifty roles in the musical which is scheduled for November 10 through November 14. Volunteers for back-stage crews, construction and staff, are needed.

Increasingly, the Back Mountain is represented in Little Theatre shows. Last year a number of new recruits were obtained from the area.

Little Theatre is located at 537 North Main Street, Wilkes-Barre.

Photos, Books On Area Lumbering Offered By Mobile, Beaumont Area

Here is something of interest to you Back Mountain folks who recall or are interested in our regional heritage of timbering.

One of the more fascinating chapters in local history deals with Rafting Days or Lumbering-Off Days on the Susquehanna and the Bradford-Sullivan-Wyoming County Libraries has recently acquired new pictures taken in those times. Any one interested in obtaining a copy of these may contact the library for further information.

Rafting Days on the Susquehanna were colorful ones. It was a dangerous, difficult way of life and the men who worked in the timber business were a hale and boisterous lot. The fact that they were also wasteful is regrettable and must be laid to their ignorance of the need to conserve the woodlots, and of conservation practices so widespread today.

Susquehanna pine was used in the production of spars or masts and their length and strength made them much prized by boatmen. During the spar producing era timbers from the West branch of the Susquehanna were rafted to Philadelphia and Baltimore and shipped all over the world.

In the score of years between 1840 and 1860 there were between 30,000 and 50,000 men working in the forests and following the logging rafts up and down the Susquehanna. In those early days contractors or jobber were paid approximately 1/4 to 2c per cubic foot for their lumber and on this amount fortunes were made.

In 1870 Pennsylvania lost its crown as lumber king to the State of Michigan, and coal began to take lumber's place as this state's key industry.

Despite its short life, the period during which lumber was rafted down the Susquehanna continues to be one of the most colorful in Pennsylvania history.

If you wish to read further concerning lumbering in the early days these books may be had through your local deposit station at Beaumont, which is serviced by the bookmobile.

Nine Miles Around

Pleased to hear that there is considerable earth being moved up at the Ski Run, with Don Keefer anticipating opening again for another season. Let's hope the coming winter isn't as disappointing as the last. This kind of recreational development is needed to promote the area as a year-round resort.

Postmaster Roy Tyson tells me that Warren Johnson, RD 1 carrier, travels 53.3 miles daily, which he thinks is the longest rural route in Luzerne County. RD 1 accounts for all mail delivered outside of the postoffice boxes at Alderson and Shawanese.

Harveys Lake's jail (cellar of firehouse) had a visitor last week until he was cleared of suspicion of molesting a teenager from the outlet, whom he picked up as a hitchhiker. The kid stole the guy's keys out of the ignition upon arrival at the outlet, then called the police. When the cruiser arrived, the car was elsewhere, presumably pushed, but the kid did not press charges, and the guy was released.

It is the opinion of some reasonably well-informed residents that the sewer line prospect is going to be dropped like a hot potato, even if the borough becomes a reality. Reason: Year-rounder opposition to any significant change in the economic status quo. "My taxes are high enough", they say, and they might be right.

On the matter of the borough itself, the all-important question that remains unanswered and that will be the confronting issue in the inevitable court showdown after all petitioning is done: What the devil is meant by the term "freelander residing" in the affected territory?

Is he a voter, a property-owner who drops in once a year, or one who lives there most of the time, or what? Strong borough support lies in the vacation and summer home trade.

Look for Joe Yatsko's landfill project to hinge on Lake Township supervisors and their interpretation of the law. It's okay with the county zoning commission and the state health department if Joe puts in a dump out in that remote corner of the township, so now it's up to the township government. If it goes through, it will be a great benefit to Back Mountain contract haulers and municipalities, and, of course, the proposed borough.

Pole By Pole: Hey, who won the Mustang? . . . Borough boys claiming they don't see as much of their opposition around the area anymore; think he's staying home . . . Isn't Cal McHose a peach of a guy to bring a basket of peaches from his orchard to the supervisors' meeting . . . And weren't there a few ambulances around here on Thursday night . . . And who are you calling 'hot rod' anyway, Fred? . . . Beach patronage light on chilly Labor Day. They're biting on nightwalkers these pleasant days, with catches registered in trout and bass.

It's always sad to see the parade of boats on Labor Day, but nice to know that next year starts on a little more optimistic note than this one did. There's a limit to how tight you can squeeze your belt. Excepting trouble from the state, we look for a big season next year.

Not at all . . . when you consider the alternatives! Your prescription is one of the biggest bargains in history. The average cost of the nearly 800 million prescriptions filled yearly in the United States is $3.31. What do you receive for that average $3.31?

- These relatively inexpensive pharmaceuticals may save you and your family hundreds of dollars and perhaps weeks in a hospital.
- They can help prevent a disease from developing to its most serious and painful point.
- You are up and around sooner . . . back to work or play.
- Less time and wages are lost.
- And, finally, these pharmaceuticals may have prevented minor, but bothersome, physical impairments resulting from the illness.

Next time you have a prescription filled, consider the medical research and development which went into it . . . hundreds of years of progress serve you in each prescription . . . and then consider the alternatives . . . where else could you buy a better bargain?
