Bulldozer 1st Sign Of Tannery Activity

The former Armour Tannery at Noxen was reported sold Friday afternoon to Jones Safety Device Enterprises Inc., with the prospect of plant improvement and eventual manufacture there, and this week a bulldozer appeared on the property, an evident first state of operations.

Owner Fred Coole, former maintenance foreman for Armour, bought the plant in April of last year and included were some valuable properties and company houses, a number of which he sold to tenants. His cost was never revealed, but it was guessed at somewhere between $25,000 and $30,000.

Sale price on the deed was reported recorded at $20,000 cost to Edward Jones, owner of the safety device manufacturing company.

The tannery suspended operations in 1961 for lack of profit, thus depriving Noxen of its chief industry. Most of the former workers are now employed elsewhere.
