Bowlerettes
Anne Schoell was the top scorer Thursday when she led Monk Plumbing to a 4 point win over Bolton's. Anne spilled 176-165 (487) pins while her team mate, Libby Cyphers, turned in 172 (474).

Whiting's took 3 from Duke Isaacs. Top scorer for the winners was Betty Lou Risch with 167 (454). Other high scorers were Ann Corbett's 161 and Toots Langdon's 179. Sally Roberts' 168.

Imperiaettes
Things were shaken up a bit Friday night when the girls got through bowling. The girls were shaken because of a misunderstanding, and because so many of their team mates were absent; and the team positions were shaken up because of absentees which caused two teams to forfeit. My opinion, which wasn't asked, is that the league should not have bowled in the first place. The same thing happened last year. Many go away over the long Easter weekend, a few feel that being Good Friday, it is wrong to bowl and others work part time at stores, florists and other places that are extremely busy over the holiday weekend. I make a motion that this league does not bowl on Good Friday next year.

O'Malia, although they won 3 points, had to forfeit 4 to Gordon because only two of their bowlers were on the line. Citgo had only one bowler present and had to forfeit 4 to Goodman. This brought Goodman up from fourth place to a tie in second with 29 points. Garrity lost 3 points to Elston's, but is still in first place, tied with Elston's, 31 each. Garrity had only three members present. Apex capped all 4 from Meneguzo. Now, Meneguzo is tied in second place with Goodman. Apex has 26, O'Malia has 25, Gordon 19 and Citgo 18.

Top scoring honors went to Barbara Eglskiss when she pilled up 177-171-183 (531) for O'Malia. Helen Bonomo topped 202 (514) for Goodman.

Single games over 160 were posted by Evelyn Kamont 163, Jane Cornell 164, Ruth Elston 172, Marilyn Morris 168, Edie Shaffer 178.

Two years of production were involved for this program, with the major filming accomplished in Rome and Florence, where Michelangelo spent most of his life. However, producer Lou Hazam even traveled behind the Iron Curtain to photograph one of the artist's pieces of sculpture for the first time on motion picture film. The voices of Peter Ustinov as Michelangelo and Jose Ferrer as the narrator highlight the presentation.

This, truly a comprehensive portrait of a very special artist, includes, nearly all of his sculpture, paintings and architectural work and some of his poetry and letters. Teachers wishing to obtain this film for viewing by their classes should contact the Pennsylvania Gas and Water Company.

College Bound

BY BRUCE HOPKINS

What Was That You Said?
Did you ever say something that was really stupid? Something that made absolutely no sense whatsoever? Well of course you have. I think I'm safe in saying that everyone has at one time or another. The thing about me is that on very rare occasions I find myself saying something that DOES make sense! Most frequently, I say things that make absolutely no sense at all. There are people in the world who have to try very hard to say something stupid, but with me it comes naturally!

The whole thing started when I had this hernia operation at the age of four. Before that time, I can't remember having ever said anything particularly illegible. Now, I don't mean that it's the doctor's fault or anything, but it does seem strange that I started saying all of these ridiculous things after I had that operation. It happened like this: I had received this box of lollypops as a gift, and early one morning (before breakfast) I took two lovely green lollypops and, being a very generous soul, I gave one to the kid in the next bed who, just the day before, had scribbled over my Big Book About Trains. Anyway, there we were licking away at these lollypops when his nurse came in and practically fainted because we were having these lollypops before breakfast. She took the other kid's lollypop and wrapped it in a piece of paper. Then she headed for me. Now you've got to understand that I'm a very quick thinker. I didn't want this nurse to think that I was so positively dumb that I didn't know that it was dangerous to eat lollypops before breakfast; so I willingly handed mine over to her smiling (revealing my mouth which was green from the lollypop), and said the first logical thing that entered my mind. "It just took mine out to look at it."

Now, for some reason, since I've gone to college, my ability for saying stupid things has increased. For example, there was the time Mrs. Doris Mallin was visiting her son Jack on campus. I had stopped to talk to Mrs. Mallin, and she was telling me about how there were over forty girls out for Keyettes this year. Just then a couple of guys walked by and I spoke to them for a moment. I then turned back to Mrs. Mallin and nonchalantly said, "You were saying that there were over forty girls out for soccer this year." For some reason this struck Mrs. Mallin as being rather humorous!

Then there was the time when Lew was leaving for Easter vacation a day early. I passed him in the hall as he was leaving, and he told me to take it easy. "Yeah, you too," I said. "Have a nice Christmas and I hope the Easter Bunny comes to your house!"

"Thanks, and the same to you—I guess," Lew replied with this odd expression on his face!

Last week my speech prof was giving us the details on our tribute speeches, and he told us that they should be on someone we had met, even if just for a short time. He then proceeded to ask several of us if we had ever met a celebrity. When he asked me I couldn't think of any particular celebrities that I had met, so I said, "Just my brother." Well, lots of people do know my brother, and he's a nice enough guy and all, but I don't know as he's exactly what you would want to call a celebrity. It just so happened that my speech prof had known my brother when he was at Bloomsburg, and he got this rather funny expression on his face as if to say, "That's what you call a celebrity!"

At any rate, I am really trying to overcome this knack for saying stupid things. I try to say logically what I'm going to think before I think it, and it usually out comes approximately exactly the way I want it too!

SEE YA!
