

Babson's Point Of View On -

As the wage-price spiral gathers steam, there is rising concern in business circles and in Washington. The need for a tax boost is everywhere discussed and there is renewed speculation that the Administration may also be forced to adopt wage-price controls.

Wage Settlements Inflationary
President Johnson has repeatedly expressed the hope that voluntary wage and price restraint could be achieved through application of the guideposts of the Council of Economic Advisers. In pursuit of that goal, the President had cautioned labor to trim its demands so as not to rock the economy. Also, he had several times used the prestige of his office to persuade industry to forego or to rescind price boosts in selected industrial raw materials.

Living Costs Climbing
The effects of recent unrealistic liberal wage settlements and of climbing prices are evident in the trend of living costs. In July, the latest month for which such statistics are available, the Bureau of Labor's Cost of Living Index increased four-tenths of one per cent over June. Higher transportation costs and a somewhat smaller-than-average boost in food prices were blamed for the upturn.

Are Wage-Price Controls Coming?
You can expect the cost of food, medical care, and other services to rise alarmingly over the next couple of months. But you can also expect the President to insist that it is too soon to do anything that would definitely put a lid on wages and prices. Mr. Johnson well realizes that inflation is a problem and that it spells danger in the period ahead. But he also realizes that the strong measures needed to combat it are unpopular and that they would have little chance of clearing Congress before the November election.

Tax Boost By January
To ease up-pressures on the economy stemming from record industrial activity and the escalated war in Vietnam, the Administration and Congress might have chosen, last spring, either to increase taxes or to cut federal spending. Instead, they did nothing.

Census To Be Taken On Local Immunization
Some families of this area will be questioned this month on the number of household members who have been immunized against polio, diphtheria, whooping cough and other communicable diseases, according to John G. Gibson, director of the U. S. Census Bureau's regional office in Philadelphia.

The questions will be added to the September Current Population Survey, conducted each month by the Bureau among selected households in 357 sample areas of the nation to obtain employment and unemployment figures for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor.

The immunization survey, covering each civilian member of the selected households, regardless of age, is sponsored by the U. S. Public Health Service, Director Gibson said.

Census interviewers who will collect data in this area include Mary T. Victor, Kingston, and Mary T. Hines, West Pittston.
