He said that Dallas is in good shape and has some good future players coming up. When I asked Roy what kind of person coach Eddie Brominski was, he said, "He teaches us good fundamental football, and is very close to his team".

I asked if football in high schools could be made safer in the future. He said, "yes". I also asked his advice for a youngster who is looking forward to playing high school football "Take in football games, try to learn the moves of older and better players."

Roy plans on going into college football or basketball. By the way he said that he thought that Sportsman's Corner and Teen Talk are good and interesting.

Good luck to ROY SUPULSKI and the whole Dallas football team this season!

College Bound

BY BRUCE HOPKINS

The Old Grind

The dance was packed. I'm telling you, there were so many kids at that dance that you could walk around the gym four times and never see the same person once. (?) But then, it was the first really big dance of the year, and it was the night before classes started, so nobody had anything better to do anyway. We pushed, shoved, and pardoned our way through the wall of people seeing kids we haven't seen since May, talking to them about their summer, and walking away trying desperately to remember their names. As we got to the middle of the gym we were bogged by an unmoving mass of bodies in front of us. We stood there waiting for the crowd to disperse a bit when suddenly the most awful thing happened: the band started playing. The unfortunate part of this was that the song was ideal for that ancient ritual dance, the Slow Fizz. There we were, centralized between 2000 kids all of whom began slow fizzaing without regard to whom or what might be in their way. An experience such as this might be considered quite similar to finding oneself on the Los Angeles Freeway at the rush hour -- on the wrong side of the road. We had no choice except to fizza. I wasn't at all sure that I was going to remember how to do it. After all, I hadn't done it all summer long. But actually it's sort of like swallowing; even though you may not do it for a while, you never forget it. Every time the music starts, you begin swallowing automatically!

Too bad studying doesn't work the same way. With studying, the longer you're away from it, the harder it is to get back in the groove. I mean, classes have been in session for a week now, and already everybody I know is about four weeks behind in their work. Tom and I decided that with all of the work we have to do, we're going to have to make some sacrifices somewhere. We started by cutting out dating on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights (we never did much dating on those nights anyway). But even after that drastic step, we decided that more had to be done. Next we gave up talking at the dinner table in order to save some time there. Also, we gave up shuffling the cards during pinochle games (that saves almost 20 minutes per game). In addition, we practiced walking at a very rapid rate of speed. Actually, it's a kind of a slow run. As a matter of fact, the other day, I passed a friend of mine who said as I whizzed by, "You know Bruce, everytime, I see you anymore you look as though you've got to be somewhere by yesterday."

Another thing that we think are a waste of time are lines. Lately we have been going to meals about fifteen minutes early so that we don't have to wait in line for fifteen minutes. (Well, we may not save any time, but at least we feel better about it.)

Yes, it's back to the old schedule. Studying for a couple of hours, taking a coffee break, and following this with a two minute Yoga headstand. I do the headstand in order to slush my brain out a little before I start studying again. You'd be surprised how well slushed my brain is!

It's nice having things back to normal. As a matter of fact, the other day I went out in the hall and passed a bleary-eyed buddy who ran up to me excitedly and said, "Do you realize that there are only 60 more days until Thanksgiving vacation!" As a matter of fact, I had just that minute finished counting them!
