I BET YOU DIDN'T KNOW

JEOPARDY

Most pharmacists have more pride in their profession than to allow lay assistants to perform duties that border on practicing pharmacy. None of these acts could be performed by non-pharmacists without the consent of the pharmacist involved. And he is the "culprit" who is responsible and is answerable for such transgressions.

When speedy dispensing of prescription drugs precludes the time necessary for the careful interpretation, selection, checking of dosage, directions and such other essential professional acts by the pharmacist, or warrants the delegation of any of these functions to lay assistants, the welfare and safety of the public is seriously jeopardized.
