

Jean Erdman To Appear At Bloomsburg College

Jean Erdman, world-known choreographer of modern dance, will present "The Anatomy of Movement" in Carver Auditorium Monday, April 24 at 8:15 p.m. as part of the Bloomsburg State College Spring Arts Festival, April 20-30.

Following her formal training at Sarah Lawrence College and several years performance as soloist with the famous Martha Graham Company, Miss Erdman attained international recognition by forming her own company and school. She is presently head of Dance Theatre and Stage Movement at New York University School of the Arts. During the past two summers, she has instructed the body movement and training for the professional group at the Shakespeare Festival Theatre, Stratford, Connecticut, and will be an Artist-in-Residence at UCLA this summer.

In addition to her evening appearance here, Miss Erdman will be conducting a master class during the afternoon of April 24. Further details regarding this class will be announced later this month.

What Was That Name Again?

Did you ever wonder about all the people running around in the world who are probably more interesting than even Bobby Lou Cramer, and yet you'll never get to meet them. Take Apoo, for example. Now, I've never met Apoo, and Apoo's never met me. In fact, he doesn't even know I exist. But can't you just tell he's interesting? With a name like Apoo, what else could he be? Unfortunately I can't remember what his last name is, but it sounds like something that would be the last name of somebody named Apoo. Anyway, he's an Indian. Not an American Indian, but a genuine, honest-to-goodness Indian Indian from India. Just like Mrs. Nehru. He's the nicest Indian I've never met.

I suppose you're probably wondering how I know Apoo if I've never met him. Well, I know him because one weekend he went to Washington, D. C. and sat on a bus with Pat Palenko, and a couple of weeks later he sent her a letter which her roommate delivered to her while she was eating lunch with us.

Fate works in funny ways doesn't it? Her roommate just walked over, handed her the letter and said, "Here, you got a letter from Apoo."

"Ooooh, Apoo!" Pat said taking the letter excitedly. "Apoo?" I asked. "Apoo Who?" She showed me the envelope with the return address on it. This was the first indication I had that he was unique. The return address was written in the lower left-hand corner!

"Uh, just who is this guy?" I queried. "Well, he's a guy I met once on my way to Washington, and he's from India, and he works up in Liverpool, near Syracuse, and we started writing, and he's real nice," she said as she ripped open the envelope. She started laughing. "Listen," she said, "he starts out, 'I am glad you are not drowned! (I had been telling him about aquatics class)," she explained. After a few moments of intense concentration, she spoke again, "Oh, hey, listen to this. There has been not much excitement here lately, except for last week when the roof blew off of the apartment house."

"I'd hate to see what he classes as real excitement."

"Oh, wait. It wasn't his wing of the apartment house. It was the other one," she continued. "Oh, well, no wonder he didn't get excited," I remarked. "I just hope it doesn't get windy up there for a while."

"But it seems they're being moved moved out anyway. I guess it isn't very safe," she pondered. "Sounds perfectly safe to me," I told her. "What's a little roof now and then anyway? They're always leaking and everything."

So now you've met Apoo. Or at least you know him as well as I do. It's funny, isn't it -- I mean, here we're talking about Apoo, and he doesn't even know we exist. I wonder how many people we don't know exist are sitting around talking about us. Doesn't that make you feel tingly all over? Oh well, I just thought I'd ask.

Speaking of interesting people, our dog has learned to sit up. This is quite an accomplishment for a dalmatian, especially since I think our dalmatian is retarded (or at least "slow"). But it's really amazing. I walk into the house and immediately King sits up. "Good dog," I say encouragingly. So he stays there. "Okay boy, that's real good." Still he stays there. "You can get down now King, baby." No he can't. He just kind of sits there and looks at you like he's saying, "Well, here I am. You got me up here, now you get me back down." (Like I said, he's kind of slow.) The other night I wanted to go to bed, except it's difficult to crawl under the sheets when King is on top of them. I tried to be very polite about it. "King, if it isn't too much trouble, would you mind hopping down off of my bed?" It was too much trouble. Finally, I knelt next to him on the bed, and began giving him a bit of encouragement from the rear. Suddenly I heard this low moaning sound, that kind of resembled a growl. "Now, King, I'm going to get mad in a minute." This didn't seem to have any effect. I tried another approach. "King, please honey, sugar, baby, get off of my bed before I belt you." King turned and looked at me, I stared back. After a few minutes of this, I very reluctantly crawled off the bed, curled up on King's rug on the floor, and went to sleep. Well, after all, I was only going to be home for a few days.

That's The Way The Old Skin Peels It was really kind of disheartening. I returned from Easter vacation and noticed a number of students who possessed rather profound tans. I'd walk up to one of these individuals and inquire, "How was your vacation?" Nonchalantly they'd reply, "Oh it was great. I spent a frolicking, mirthful, jocular, fun-filled week in Florida. How was your vacation?" Well, I really didn't know exactly how to respond to this query. It was a pretty hard act to follow. Usually I would just smile boisterously and say, "Oh, I spent a frolicking, mirthful, jocular, fun-filled weekend in the Back Mountain Area, heh, heh."

I don't know whether I didn't sound convincing or what, but they always laughed. As if I couldn't have a frolicking, mirthful, jocular, fun-filled week in the Back Mountain! They just don't know what a frolicking, mirthful, jocular, fun-filled week is! (I keep telling myself). What does Florida have anyway? Yeah, who wants to go there? There isn't anything there Tim Lavelle, who was with Roy in the Fort Lauderdale area watching the riots (they claim they were innocent bystanders) who merely viewed the proceedings) brought me back a genuine Florida souvenir -- a dietetic orange milk chocolate bar. I suppose you're wondering what a dietetic orange milk chocolate bar tastes like, aren't you? The only way I can describe it would be to say that it rather tastes like a milk chocolate orange, you know?

In case you're interested, you can get to Florida in exactly 24 hours of straight driving. Of course, it helps if you have somebody with you who can sleep while you're driving, and drive while you're sleeping. Also, from what I understand, it helps if you don't drive within the speed limits. Oh well, enough of Florida.

The most horrible thing happened to me one day last week -- I woke up. That was my first mistake of the day. The thing was, I thought it was going to be a terrific day because I woke up to the tune of Sherry! Now Sherry, as you probably know, is the title song from a new Broadway show. It had just opened, and I knew that the review of it was going to appear in the New York Times that very same day. Therefore, it was rather appropriate that the song was playing on my clock radio when I woke up. Unfortunately, the radio went off 5 minutes early in order for

The Two "Walts"

Walter Mohr, Lehman Avenue, Dallas, left, Governor for District 741, Rotary International, is shown here shaking hands with Walter Sebring, Governor-nominee for District 741. Both men will play prominent rolls in the forthcoming Conference to be held at The Inn, Buck Hill Falls, April 14, 15, 16.

Governor Walter Mohr with his wife, Mary, will preside over the three-day Conference and be honored at the Governor's Banquet and Ball Saturday evening. Walt is Development Officer for Wilkes College, daughter Mimie will go to Sweden in August with Rotary Student Exchange Program.

John Stahl Speaker At Horsemen's Meet

Tip and Martha Elston, Kunkle, have purchased the Windy Valley Inn at Forkston, formerly owned by Dan Hurley.

Disclosure of the sale was revealed when John Stahl, Shavertown, long time member of the North Mountain Trailriders Association, was guest speaker at the Annual Banquet of the Schuylkill County Boots and Saddle Club at Jefferson Grange, Auburn and Summit Station, Pa., on Saturday evening.

Mr. Stahl entertained the group with amusing anecdotes concerning the late trailmaster John Carey with whom he had been associated in riding circles for the past 20 years.

His main topic was "The Management and Care of Saddle Horses". The speaker extended a cordial invitation to the Schuylkill Club to come to the Endless Mountains of Penna., and Windy Valley Inn and get acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Elston. "Tip" Elston is president of the North Mountain Trailriders Association.

The local club is planning its spring ride May 18, 19 and 20, through the Endless Mountains.

Mr. and Mrs. Stahl were invited guests of the Schuylkill County Boots and Saddle Club.

me to hear Sherry. This was discouraging. Then I went to comb my hair, and it wouldn't comb. It just kind of flew around all over the place. So did I. Then later in the day I read the review of the above-mentioned play. Well, Walter Ker wasn't exactly exuberant over it or anything. I mean, he said that it did have some good moments -- here and there. Oh well, that's the way the curtain falls, you know. SEE YA!

SEPTIC TANK or SUMP TROUBLE?

Every system has trouble in time due to greases and detergents that destroy the 'friendly bacteria' and cause an accumulation of sludge to form, which in time, will reach the outlet to the drainfield. The sludge or solids, will flow into the drainfield and clog up the entire system from drainfield back to septic tank.

DRAIN SPARKLE will liquify the reducible solids and sludge into liquid--thus passing it out to the drainfields where it can be absorbed into the soil--in "liquid" form instead of solid matter. It will increase bacterial growth--and this action is a MUST in all septic tanks and sewage disposal systems.
