Mary Lou Casterline Completes Story Of Year's Stay In Bolivia

We stopped at a little pueblo which consisted of one row of about six houses, where we ate. Then on to more mountains, the last ones! These were very beautiful, with brown, green and purple colors, and the shadows of clouds upon them. As we came closer to Cochabamba skirts, blouses and shawls. Cochabamba is known as the Garden of Bolivia and indeed it is. The plaza is a thing of beauty with all types and colors of flowers, trees with clusters of orange blossoms and water fountains carved of stone. Cochabamba is completely different to Santa Cruz. Santa Cruz has no paved streets, whereas Cochabamba is almost completely paved. It is a tourists' paradise. The stores are filled with colorful panchos, jewelry and Bolivian woven rugs. It reminded me of a small American town. We went to the market place, called the "Cancha" and had a glorious time buying woven purses, blankets and rugs, all woven with typical scenes of Bolivia, for our friends and families back home. Department store shopping will never be the same!

Cochabamba is far from quaint. It has no ox carts or oxen being driven down the street as has Santa Cruz, and in place of the four wheel drive jeeps so necessary in Santa Cruz, there are real honest-to-goodness cars. It is very hard to believe that the two cities are only 45 minutes apart by plane. It is a touch of the old world and the new. The most beautiful thing about Cochabamba is the mountains all around the city. They are so beautiful that they seem to be painted.

The market place here is very organized. They have one room set aside for the babies of the women who work in it. Then there is another large room with rows of tables and scales for the sale of meat. Outside there are rows of sheet covered stands that the Chola Indians have set up for the display of their goods to tourists, especially gringos! American products can be purchased, but at double or triple the prices. There is a separate section for bread and rolls, piled high upon sheet covered stands, and one can purchase a large loaf of bread for about 8c.

I sometimes think I was dreaming all the glorious sun and golden tan and I'm on a summer vacation. After climbing since 8 a.m. we decided at noon to make our return trip. We took a different route back down the mountain and saw Indians washing clothes by stepping on them and beating them against the rocks in the river. They are dried by placing them on bushes and stones. When we returned to the hut, the boys built a bonfire. We sat around eating fruit, and after eating we danced the "Queca", a dance from Cochabamba.

At six o'clock we started down to meet the bus which was to take us back to town, but it did not come and we had to walk back to town. After 8 hours of climbing I did not think I was going to make it. Half-way back to Cochabamba we managed to get a ride on a truck and as we piled in we were so grateful, for those last few kilometers could have been the straw that broke the camels back!

I have tried to describe everything in full, and although there is so much to tell I know I must end somewhere. Perhaps the best way to bring this article to a close is to tell about the Sports Night at the stadium. The Rotarians played the Lions Club in a game of soccer and the Lions won, 4-0. There were motorcycle races, burro races, which were very funny, and also there was a representation of the Choco war in which so many thousands of men were killed over a dispute of the border line of Bolivia. The history of Bolivia is filled with disputes and revolutions, both large and small. Having lived here in Bolivia for almost a year, I find myself thinking of her as a small child, trying to stand up and yet always managing to fall down or being knocked down. In a more

We decided to go on a mountain climbing picnic for a closer look at the beautiful mountains. I am not sure whether it was the altitude, or the excitement of the trip, but I was very tired. We took a bus to the outskirts of the town and from there we walked two kilometers to a small house where we left our food. After resting we started our hike. It was more like an excursion, and believe me it was lighter vein, the latest word in revolutions comes from Santa Cruz where they are having a Revolution of Pavement Workers. Fortunately there is no fighting, just no working! Well, this is all for now. I will be seeing you all soon at which time I will give personal thanks to all the Rotary members; the people back home who have so kindly written to me; and also to the Dallas Post for allowing me to tell everyone about my trip to Bolivia.
