The Steam Locomotive Is Still Very Much Alive

The magic call of the old steam train whistle can still be heard as a locomotive huffs and puffs across Pennsylvania's countryside. Yes, the days of the steam locomotive are still very much alive. According to the Travel Development Bureau of Pennsylvania's Department of Commerce, an increasing number of requests for information concerning railroad museums and steam locomotives are being serviced daily.

Pennsylvania boasts four operating railroad museums at the present time, and two more are planned for the near future.

An era of billowing skirts, colorful parasols, the handlebar moustache, and stovepipe hats is quickly recalled as one boards "Old Number 31" at the Strasburg Railroad Station in Strasburg, Pa. The past is relived as you ride in luxurious Victorian splendor on the red plush cushions of a coach built more than seventy-five years ago. Founded in 1832, during the presidency of Andrew Jackson, Strasburg Railroad is America's oldest short-line railroad. Close to the nationally-known bird sanctuary, Hawk Mountain, the W.K. & S., popularly known as the "Hawk Mountain Line," is found at the town of Kempton. On the Hawk Mountain Line you can ride behind an authentic steam engine close to the site of a former Delaware Indian Village, past "Renegade Ski Slope," and into the magnificent Ontelaunee Valley, bordered on the North by the Appalachian Trail.

Fun for the whole family is found on an old-time narrow gauge steam railroad at Orbisonia, Pa. A ride through the lovely Aughwick Valley, which is surrounded by the Tuscorora Mountains, can be enjoyed aboard the East Broad Top, "train of yesterday". The luxurious parlor car "Orbisonia" was reputedly used President Grover Cleveland on his fishing trips into the Pennsyl-

An exhilarating thrill is experienced by kids from six to sixty when they ride the old steam "Lokie" at Ashland. The Henry chassis, carries you over a mountain side narrow gauge railroad of her friends including, Evelyn Ashland is also the home of "Pioneer

Plans are being made in Green-Mr. and Mrs. Russ Walters and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kuczawa ville, Pennsylvania, to utilize one granddaughter, Donna Walters, and and family, Reading, have returned of the largest steam locomotives ever made in the U.S.A.
