Safeguard YOUR HEALTH

MEASLES

One of the most contagious infections that attacks man is measles which no longer needs to occur at all.

Those who regard measles as a harmless childhood disease should take a good look at the statistics. Hundreds of American children die as a result of measles every year. Even with excellent medical attention, some complications develop in about one out of every six cases. In some instances measles can lead to permanent physical impairment.

Today, several vaccines are available for protection against measles. A single injection of a live measles vaccine can protect a child for life against the dangers of the disease. Your medical doctor will be happy to discuss the immunization of your children.

Measles is caused by a virus. The source is the secretions of the nose and throat of persons with the disease who spread it to others by coughs or sneezes. The disease develops about ten days after the virus finds its victim and the person with the disease can communicate it to others from about four days before to five days after the rash appears. Before the rash develops, there usually is fever, a hacking cough and inflamed eyes. The red rash usually develops three to five days after the first symptoms and generally begins on the face and neck.

Strict confinement to bed is advisable. The patient should be protected from cold and dampness for ten days or two weeks and because the eyes are irritated and extra sensitive to light, the lighting should be subdued. The diet should be soft with plenty of fluids. Measles renders its victims highly susceptible to other infections. The most dreaded complication, although rare, is encephalitis which may result in death.

Other persons living in the same house who have not been immunized and have not had measles are almost certain to contract the disease. Quarantining can be carried by the air to others.

Winner Of Rotary Fair Colored T-V

J. Kozemchak, Sr.

Mrs. Helen Warrell, Park Street, Dallas, was the lucky winner of the colored television awarded at the Dallas Rotary Fall Fair, and it's easy to see just how pleased she was. Shown here is Francis Ambrose, co-chairman of the 1967 annual fair, congratulating Mrs. Warrell as Warren Stanton, Rotarian, looks on. Peter Arnaud served with Ambrose as co-chairman of the fair.

According to Ambrose and Arnaud, this year's fair topped all others in attendance and interest. Since the fair is to a great extent a participation event on the part of the public, it is only through public interest that the arts, crafts, hobbies, homemakers' skills, baby show, horse show, etc. can be successful. All members of the Dallas Rotary Club wish to take this opportunity to thank those who participated in the fair in any way and ask that they plan to participate in the 1968 fair.

Carl Henderson, Dallas Rotary president, said that funds earned by the Rotarians are used for the following:

Back Mountain Library, Rotary Leadership Camp, Back Mountain YMCA, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, Dallas and Lake-Lehigh Schol Libraries, Crippled Children, Ambulance and Fire Dept., United Fund, Little League Baseball and Teener Baseball.

Two Ministers Object To Proposed Legislation

Two former pastors of the Back Mountain Rev. William Reid, now of Central Methodist Church, Wilkes-Barre, and Rev. Guy Leinthal, Dorancton, voiced over television last week their objections to the proposed legislation extending state aid to parochial and private schools. They held that public aid to private schools would increase their number, and might even result in destruction of the public school system, as in Holland; and that people who choose to send their children to private schools should foot the bill.

They proposed shared time or dual enrollment, where students study certain subjects in parochial schools and others in public schools, as a way of lessening the financial burden on the parochial schools, and call attention to 6,000 students already studying under this plan in the Pittsburgh area.
