ATLAS

One of the most fascinating treasures to come to light during the Sesquicentennial observance was Carleton Kocher's copy of an Atlas of Luzerne County, published in 1873, when the present Lackawanna County was included.

Every township is mapped, at a scale of 1½ inches to the mile. Each house is marked, with the owner's name. Schools, churches, mills and stores are identified.

Roads and creeks too small for standard road maps are included.

The reproductions of Back Mountain township maps have been reduced to 75% of their size in the Atlas, making the scale 1 and 1/8 inches to the mile. This is still large enough to discover familiar landmarks, and follow roads which have long since been abandoned or turned into four-lane highways.

From actual Surveys

by and under the direction of

D. A. BRICKEL

Hoop skirts, bustles, and high stiff collars were unknown in 1817. While the frontier woman probably dressed somewhat differently, high fashion featured the low neckline, high waistline and straight-hanging skirt of the French Empire. The young lady above looked to Dolley Madison for style leadership.

The gentleman, with his ruffled shirt, probably wore knee britches and buckled shoes. Long trousers, slim-legged and held in place by a strap under the foot, were starting to replace them.

Dateline 1900

Mrs. Dungey sent items taken from a tattered Dallas Post, dated August 18, 1900.

Decorative advertising cards were used by businessmen in the last century. Mrs. Carrie Caperoon found a number of them in an old picture frame and loaned them to the Post for the tabloid.

B. W. Brickel has torn down his tenant house that stood between his residence and store. It was a very old building although in a good state of preservation, and was said to be the first painted house in town. It was formerly owned and occupied by Capt. Jacob Rice, and it stood where Wm. H. Rice's house now stands. The Post Office was kept in it fifty or sixty years ago.
