

Lake-Lehman school presents "Stuck Pot"

Lake-Lehman High School's senior play, "Stuck Pot," a comedy farce by Roger Garris will be presented Nov. 20 under the co-direction of Maureen Purcell and Carol Oliver.

Worthington Women's Academy sets the scene for three hilarious acts involving the antics of young adolescents from senior high school. When an annual dance is held at the women's academy, the boys from neighboring Jason School who are made to attend, decide to "liven it up" by creating a 'stuck pot' which goes to the boy that dances all night with the ugliest girl. The fun really begins when the girls discover the plan and decide to outwit the boys. What results is one of the most hilarious dances and a surprise love affair with a most unlikely couple.

Alice Ann Sedgewick, the chemistry brain played by Joann Zaleskas, seems to have no interest in boys. She meets Edward Mott who holds similar love and knowledge of the sciences and is portrayed by Michael Kelly.

Other major roles are portrayed by Sandy Ashton as Dean Taggart and Allen Kitchen as Dr. Jacoby. Mr. and Mrs. Sedgewick, Alice Ann's parents, are Robert Diddlelock and Janis Blight. Also cast in a supporting role is Joanita Swartz as Mary Thompkins, Alice's roommate at the academy.

In faculty roles, Lynn Adams portrays the prim-and-proper spinster, Amy Coulter, while Pam Johns is the naive Lucille Caldwell. Main parts of students consist of sextop Kay Emerson by Sue Megargel and the sarcastic Gail Treet by Linda Reed.

Other speaking roles went to Pepper Swan, Linda Adams, Bob James, Jackie Adams, Pat Laposky, Adam Stefanovich, Sharon Shurmanek, Pam Kalins, Ross Ferrara, Annette Germick, Richard Derby, Kathy Cook and Robin Eneboe.

Extras are Ken Austin, Doug Ehret, Rick Newhart, Dale Nygren and Allan Kahn.

A large production staff is finishing off the backstage contributions under the management of property, Paula Fisher; stage, Rick Wagner and David Smith; scenic design, Dale Nygren and Susan Nalbony; sound and light, Allen Kitchen; costume coordinator, Lisa Bennett; makeup, Carle Strawser; business, Lynn Evans and Monica Brin; and publicity, Suzanne Rodriguez.
