First National Bank name change effective

The First National Bank of Wilkes-Barre, one of the largest banks in this area, today officially changed its name to The First National Bank of Eastern Pennsylvania. Although the name of the bank was changed, First National retained its original National Bank Charter, No. 30, which was issued on July 21, 1863. This charter is the 11th oldest national bank charter in the United States.

Thomas H. Kiley, president, commenting on the name change said, "The name of the bank was changed for the reason that the bank's area of operation and influence has grown beyond the territorial confines of the greater Wilkes-Barre Area. First National is now involved in banking enterprises in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New York in addition to its local involvements."

In addition to its main office in Wilkes-Barre, The First National Bank of Eastern Pennsylvania has 14 branch offices located in Kingston, Dallas, Wyoming, Hanover Township, Plains, Mountaintop, White Haven, Conyngham, Drums, and Bloomsburg.
