Dallas mayor indignant over salary of road boss

Dallas Borough Mayor Stephen Hartman expressed indignation over the appointment of Ralph Garris as roads supervisor at the regular meeting of Dallas Borough Council April

Pointing out that the $6,500 salary granted Garris exceeds by several hundred dollars the salaries paid the borough's police chief and officers, Mayor Hartman rebuked council members for their action.

The motion to replace roadmaster Andrew Peranto with Borough Secretary Garris was made by Councilman Jerry Machell and unanimously approved by council. Mr. Machell told The Post following the meeting that Mr. Garris will make inspections, order materials and receive complaints in addition to the other responsibilities of a road-master.

"Because Andy Peranto has only he year to work before retiring," Mr. Machell explained, "we thought it would be wise to for the future."

Mr. Peranto's wages were subsequently raised by council from $2.30 to $2.50 per hour.

A motion by Councilman Willard Newberry which he described as an attempt "to try to obtain more money for the borough without raising taxes" also won the unanimous support of council. Newberry recommented that the maximum $25 charge for a building permit be abolished and that a flat fee of $2 per $1,000 of estimated building expenses be levied.

Council agreed to pay half the cost of replacing the borough's honor roll at Memorial Highway and Lake Street when Councilman Machell advised them that it would be less expensive to replace the old marker than it would be to restore it. The Daddow-Isaacs Post of the American Legion will assume the other half of costs, he stated.

Promising that the new borough park at Luzerne Avenue and Burndale Road, will be "in business within three weeks," Councilman George Thomas won approval for the application of a "tough green base" on the park's tennis court and installation of nets and standards. Total cost for the work was listed at $1,760.

"Donations are coming in for have him train another person the park," Thomas stated, 'especially from the women's clubs. . .we are very grateful for
