Pa. Game Commission Instructs Youth on How to Handle Guns

An eager group of boys and girls, ages 12 to 16, met Saturday morning at Pennsylvania Game Commission office, Dallas, to learn how to handle guns safely.

It is compulsory in Pennsylvania, according to game Warden Gosky, that boys and girls between the ages of 12 and 16 must have had at some time a safety training course before they can secure a hunting license.

Edward Gosky, of the Commission office, was in charge of the class, assisted by Jim Phillips and Al Rineman, hunter-safety instructors. Mr. Gosky reported there were 158 youngsters in the free class, 30 of them girls.

Upon completing Saturday's six-hour class, each youngster was given a card of certification.

Although the program has been compulsory in this state since 1969, the local game commission office has sponsored such classes, under Mr. Gosky's tutelage, since 1963. "We try to teach the youths how to take a gun into a field, how to handle it once in the field, how to take it home, and how to put it away safely at home. Most accidents with guns occur at home. Game laws and respect for land owners are taught also," Mr. Gosky said.

The potential nimrods in last week's class were mostly from this area, but there were some out-of-state boys and girls and some from as far away as Philadelphia. If they so chose, the parents of the children could remain in the classroom, along with their child.

Any organization may sponsor such a class, Mr. Gosky revealed. The State Game Commission sponsored the last one. There will be another class Oct. 8 in Forty Fort, sponsored by the Forty Fort police.

Parents with children seeking safety-hunting certification may contact Game Warden Gosky for further information concerning future classes.
