A beautiful thought from the mind and heart of a poet; unfortunately, in the developing countries, the gifts bequeathed to children are, more often than not, disease, malnutrition, illiteracy, and hopelessness. Chamber of Commerce Offers Language Course

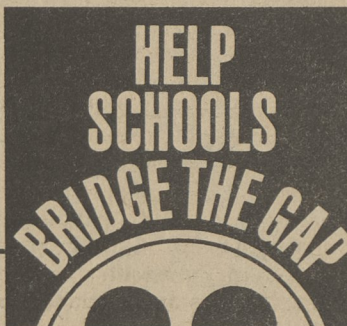

A short course on the effective use of language will be conducted in Wilkes-Barre Nov. 17 and 18 under the aegis of the Greater Wilkes-Barre Chamber of Commerce, it was announced recently by Edgar J. Lashford, executive vice president of the organization.

The macadamia nut, a hard-shelled nut somewhat resembling a fibert, is Hawaii's third largest crop and ranks directly behind sugar and pineapple.

The program will be conducted by Frank A. Patterson Jr., president of Motivational Concepts Inc., who will present his course designed to teach effective communication in the face-to-face conversational setting.

"The course has nothing to do with the correct use of English, but rather with how to make an idea interesting and acceptable to another person," Lashford explained. "Patterson is going to amplify the idea that attitudes are more important than words; talk about what impresses the hearer of a persuasive message; how some people are unwittingly alienated; and how to respond to an employee or customer who is temporarily unhappy. He will also discuss producing agreements that last."

Conducted with the aid of visuals, pre-recorded segments, lecture and voluntary audience participation, the multimedia presentation has been successfully conducted by Patterson under the sponsorship of chambers of commerce across the nation, Lashford added. Interested firms or individuals are asked to contact the Chamber of Commerce for additional details.

Last month the U.S. Surgeon General urged housewives to return to using phosphate detergents because low-phosphate and no-phosphate detergents were too caustic.

This week, during testimony in front of the House Conservation and Natural Resources subcommittee the Surgeon General changed his advice substantially, telling the committee that indeed there are things to use other than phosphate detergents and in fact some of the phosphate detergents are more caustic, and thus more dangerous, than the no-phosphate detergents.

Mrs. Clem Zinger of the conservation subcommittee research staff said the hearings were called by Congressman Henry Reuss of Wisconsin to look into what appeared to be a government reversal of policy. Not long ago the Environmental Protection Agency urged housewives to stop using phosphates because they were ruining America's water. Then, last month at a press conference, U.S. Surgeon General Jesse L. Steinfeld urged women to start using phosphates again because the no-phosphate detergents were too caustic and too dangerous to have around little kids, who might rub the detergent into their eyes, swallow it, or get some on their skin.

Cong. Reuss accused the government of following "the detergent industry's line" and promised to get to the bottom of the problem during the hearings when they resume next week. The subcommittee researcher, Mrs. Zinger, told Earth News that while caustic sodas are dangerous to children, there is no indication that they harm water, as phosphates do. She said the detergent industry is claiming that caustic sodas, which are used as phosphate substitutes, break down the anti-flammability ingredient in material when washed but she says the charge appears to be groundless.

The most powerful and dangerous caustic soda is sodium metasilicate, Mrs. Zinger said. It is a caustic soda used in many low-phosphate or no-phosphate detergents. She emphasized, that there are other substitutes besides phosphates which are not as caustic, and therefore safe.

She said the Food and Drug Administration technicians, the agency empowered to test detergents, does not have the time or manpower to check each detergent. When the FDA does test a detergent and finds it dangerously caustic all it can do is require the product labeled that it is caustic and dangerous—the FDA cannot take a product off the market because a chemical ingredient is considered too caustic. Mrs. Zinger asserted that the detergent industry can work faster than the FDA. She said the FDA can only test two detergents a month, while there are more than 200 on the market. The detergent industry technicians can re-formulate a chemical faster than the FDA can require labeling, she said.
