Study May Determine New Development Test

John F. Rosser, principal, announces that the Dallas Junior High School has been selected by Science Research Associates, Inc. to participate in a project that involves pretesting items for possible inclusion in future National Educational Development Tests for grades seven and eight. The continuing development of tests of this nature depends upon the co-operation and the assistance provided by the schools which have been selected to represent particular areas of the United States.

The testing will be done in a 45-minute session Jan. 13 under the direction of Gordon R. Schlier, school counselor. The students who participate in this project will get experience working under timed conditions on sample items that will be used to develop a more valuable test battery. For cooperating in this development testing project, the Dallas School District will receive a reimbursement from Science Research Associates.
