Nearly 100 senior education majors at Wilkes College have completed their prescribed student-teaching requirements with the recent end of the fall semester and are now looking forward to the spring semester, opening Jan. 21, and graduation in May.

Edwin Johnson, assistant professor of education and director of student teaching, recently made his report on the accomplishments of the student teachers during their semester of classroom teaching.

In that report to Dr. Eugene Hammer, chairman of the Wilkes Education department, Mr. Johnson expressed satisfaction with the way the students performed. He based his findings on the written summaries submitted from the various regional school districts that hosted the student teachers.

Both Mr. Johnson and Dr. Hammer expressed gratitude toward the co-operating teachers in whose classes the Wilkes education majors were able to put into practice the basic concepts of good classroom procedure as it was learned during their prior training at the local college.

Polyester—Easy Care Fiber—Polyester is a man-made fiber found in double knits, permanent press fabrics, curtains, draperies, upholstery, carpets and pillow stuffing. It has become the darling of the textile industry recently because of its popular characteristics. Mrs. Ruth Ann Wilson, Extension clothing specialist at The Pennsylvania State University, says polyester is durable, wrinkle-resistant, dries rapidly, rarely needs ironing and has good shape retention including holding pleats and creased well. Most garments of polyester are machine washable and dryable, but as with anything you buy, check labels and follow care instructions.
