St. Patrick's Day To Feature Good and Evil

The good and evil of the Irish are combined in Northeastern Pennsylvania's activity schedule to provide an interesting variety of events for the March St. Patrick's Day period.

God is represented by old St. Patrick himself and he will be saluted at a number of banquets and parties in the region. The fun begins at the Master Host Inn, Wilkes-Barre, March 16, at the 14th annual party in honor of the good saint. On the same day, the Friendly Sons of Patrick will toast him at banquets in Wilkes-Barre, Pittston and Hazleton. Nearby Scranton is preparing its annual St. Patrick's Day march for the 17th.

The Molly Maguires, a secret Irish society, resorted to violence and terrorism in the anthracite coal fields during the nineteenth century. Recalling this era of evil, a lecture on the Molly Maguires will open an Anthracite Festival on March 18 at Highacres, the Hazleton campus of the Pennsylvania State University. On March 30, the feature film, "Molly Maguires", will be presented at the same site. During the March 18-30 period a variety of exhibits, concerts and other presentations will illustrate the culture and color of the early anthracite era.

More information on the above events and over a hundred additional listings are part of the Luzerne County Tourist Promotion Agency's Calendar of Events which is available free at 301 Market St., Kingston.
