The new regulations set forth the purposes of review by the commission, the scope of review, procedures for securing a review of a project and public hearing procedures.

The new regulations allow review of Federal, state, local and private sector proposals before the commission which may result in a significant interstate effect on the water resources of the basin and projects that would affect immediate and long-range alternatives for the management, development, conservation or utilization of the basin's water resources.

SCID Maj. Joseph Ryan Attends FBI Symposium

SAC Richard J. Baker, Philadelphia Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, announced today that Major Joseph Ryan, chief of custody and security, Pennsylvania State Correctional Institution, Dallas, attended a national symposium on "The American Penal System as a Revolutionary Target". The symposium will be conducted at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Va., from June 19-21.

This is one of a series of specialized schools which the FBI sponsors to foster professionalism in law enforcement and related fields. The symposium afforded key correctional officials of federal and state penal institutions an opportunity to discuss revolutionary and extremist propaganda and its influence upon prison inmates.

SAC Baker stated that FBI director Clarence M. Kelley planned to appear before the attendees, who were also to be addressed by Congressman Richard H. Ichord, chairman of the house committee on internal security; Norman A. Carlson, director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons; and selected FBI special agent supervisors from FBI headquarters.

SAC Baker added that the attendees were provided information to help them deal with the problems of revolutionary and extremist propaganda, through the interchange of material concerning problems which have arisen in the past. It is felt the symposium will contribute greatly to improving the penal system in our country and eliminating confrontations between prison authorities and inmates in the future.

Transfers of state civil service employees from one state agency to another must be initiated by the agency to which the change is desired.

Revenue Sharing Funds Copped by Keystone Cops

by Alan Berlow
Post's Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON—Preliminary reports on expenditures of Pennsylvania's Fiscal Year 1974 revenue sharing allotments indicate that the largest portion of the state's funds was spent on public safety and education with very little allocated for poverty and community development projects.

Public safety allotments (primarily to police) accounted for 21 percent and education for 12 percent of the total $344 million on which reports were available for expenditures by state and local governmental units in Pennsylvania.

One percent of the funds expended went to social services for the aged and the poor. Less than one percent of the allocated funds went to the combined areas of social development and housing, and community and economic development.

Final reports on how Pennsylvania used its $745 million in Fiscal Year 1974 revenue sharing funds will not be available for another month.

The federal revenue sharing plan, which went into effect in October, 1972, authorized $30.2 billion to state and local governments on the theory that they would be better able than the Federal Government to determine their needs. The program is intended to be a partial alternative to the federal spending programs for social services, popular in the 1960's, which were criticized because they did not eliminate the poverty problems they were set up to resolve.

Statewide reports of revenue sharing money spent directly by Pennsylvania cities and townships indicated large amounts of funds going to public safety, but very little of the local dollars going to education, which is being funded primarily through state revenue sharing allotments. Initial reports from Pennsylvania cities showed that 48 percent of the $130 million on which reports were available went to public safety, while reports from townships showed 18 percent directed to that area.

Townships spent 10 percent of their revenue sharing funds on transportation.

Less than two percent of the funds spent by Pennsylvania cities and townships was committed to poverty programs while county governments spent about four percent.

While the Pennsylvania revenue sharing expenditures are incomplete, they generally seem to be in line with the priorities of other state and local governments nationwide.

As of June 30, 1973, 42 percent of the $6.6 billion in federal revenue sharing funds had been spent, with 23 percent committed to public safety, 24 percent to education and 15 percent to transportation. About five percent went to social services for the poor and aged, housing, community and economic development. County governments committed about two percent of their funds in these social welfare areas and local cities and towns about one percent.

Many observers of the new revenue sharing program have speculated that large portions of the funds are being spent on public safety (primarily police protection) and education so that communities can avoid tax hikes. These areas are normally funded by state and local taxes.

In addition to public safety and education, Pennsylvania revenue sharing money has gone to environmental protection and conservation (four percent), public transportation (four percent), recreation and culture (four percent), and libraries (two percent.)
